

PHONE
M2320

Mainly About Women

PHONE
M2320

Empire Day.

Gigantic preparations are being made for the celebration of Empire Day, the various schools drawing out wonderful programs of games and dances, songs and drills, while there will be a "big day" at the Horse Show building, the Frontiersmen to turn out and help in the general gathering. The stores are already showing flags and banners, bright ribbons, and pennants, while Empire costumes adorn the window beauties in the ladies' departments. Some of the stores have arranged to keep open on Saturday and to celebrate on Monday instead.

Frontiersmen Smoker.

A rifle practice on the ranges at East Calgary will be held on Saturday afternoon, with a smoker in the clubhouse at 8 p.m.

Women's Literary Club.

The Women's Literary Club held its eighth annual meeting yesterday afternoon, the following officers being elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Lamont; first vice-president, Mrs. McCutcheon; second vice-president, Mrs. Gurney; third vice-president, Mrs. Lane. Next year's program will be selected from Browning, Ruskin, and Wordsworth.

Naomi Mothers' Meeting.

A meeting of the Naomi Mothers will be held this afternoon in the home of Mrs. S. C. McKinnin, 519 Fourteenth avenue east, at 2:30 o'clock. This meeting will be under the auspices of the W.C.T.U., will discuss local option, and address to be given by Mrs. Woodhall.

M.U.R. Club.

The regular dance of the M.P.R. club will be held this evening in Unity hall. Professor Robinson will be in charge of the floor, and a good attendance is expected.

Annual Women's Alliance Meeting.

The postponed annual meeting of the Unitarian Women's Alliance will be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Unity hall.

Mrs. W. A. Fleming has returned to the city from a vacation spent in Medicine Hat as the guest of Mrs. Turpin. Miss Lucy Kelly has returned to Calgary. Miss Kelly has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Long of Lethbridge.

Mr. and Mrs. J. McCoy, Fourteenth street west, are being congratulated on the birth of a son.

A committee meeting of the Consumers' League which has been founded on the Economic Committee of the Council of Women, will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the hall. The committee of the league is the same as that of the Economic Committee, with

BOARD OF TRADE IS NOW SURE OF ITS DAY OF ORIGIN

Secretary Receives from Senator Copy of Certificate of Incorporation in 1890.

The board of trade has now secured its birth certificate. There had been much uncertainty as to the existence of that important document for a long time and the members of the board started a keen search. The aid of Senator Loughheed was summoned and yesterday morning Secretary Wilson received from Ottawa a copy of the interesting document which had been ferreted out as a result of the diligence of the Calgary senator. This is an exact duplicate of the original and will be treasured by the members of the board.

The certificate was applied for in the year 1890. Therein it is stated that the population of Calgary at that time was over 2,500, including whites and Indians. A. L. Macdonald, president of the association, with the late Patrick Nolan secretary. The total membership numbered 48 and the following of the number are still members of the board: Jas. Reilly, Col. James Walker, W. H. Cushing, Alex. Allen, Wm. Robertson, G. C. King, T. Skinner, A. McBride, J. C. Linton, R. F. Hutchings, L. H. Doll, D. W. Maren, J. F. Glanville and J. A. Nolan.

The first meeting of the Christian Police association will be held in the Y. M. C. A. this afternoon at 8 o'clock. Rev. Alexander Ester will deliver the address.

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY.

LOST—Gold cuff link with engraved crest and motto. Finder will be rewarded by returning to room 111, Alberta block. M219-147.

STORE TO RENT—Splendid location on Fourth street east. Apply to the International Investors Ltd., 311 First street east. Phone 3995. P. O. Box 1122.

TO LET—Furnished rooms with kitchen privileges; family leaving town for two months; use of phone. 221 Fifth avenue west. M55-142.

TO LET—At Banff, furnished cottage from June 1 to July 1. Apply 121 Seventh avenue west. Phone M11-147.

TO LET—Modern furnished two-room suite; brass bed, Ostermeyer mattress, single and double rooms, heated by gas, bath and phone. Transients accommodated. 318 Sixth avenue west. Phone M55-142.

AGENTS WANTED TO introduce our brand new articles everywhere. Possibilities are unlimited. Just $1.00 and the sale is made. Quick sale, large profit. Write or particulars to The Canadian Supply & Specialty Co., P. O. Box 71, Fraser Valley Station, Que. 1147-143.

FOR SALE—75 acres, 51 mile circle from Calgary post office, subdivided into 300 blocks. Will sacrifice at $200 per acre if you can pay for third cash. This property will sell within two years at $100 per acre. It is level and fine soil. Situated close to new Dominion Western Railway survey and will be close to suburban railway. Apply Box E 99 Albertan. 143.

Will readers please note that the Society Editor's telephone number is now M5183 instead of M2320 as formerly?

The addition of Mrs. McGregor as secretary.

Madame Anderson will receive this afternoon from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. Mrs. Ingram, of Glasgow, Scotland, a bride of the month, will receive with her.

Beaux Esprits Club.

Tomorrow evening at Al Azhar Temple the Beaux Esprits Club will give an informal "Hop." Mrs. Howell's orchestra will be in attendance and everything possible is being done to make the affair an entire success.

Good Time Club.

The last hop of the season was given last night at Al Azhar and everyone present contrived to have a really "good time." There was a splendid turnout of members and friends. Mr. Legat's orchestra provided the music.

GRANT-TREMAINE

On Wednesday, May 14, 1913, at St. John's church, Sutton West by the Rev. Canon Tremayne, assisted by the Rev. Herbert Tremayne, Lorna Anne Emily, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tremayne, Sutton West, Ontario, to Edmund Nicholas Grant, of Calgary, Alta.

Cinderella Club.

The Cinderella club will hold its regular dance this evening in Wright's Crescent Heights. The Unity orchestra will provide the music.

Annual Meeting of Women's Council.

Yesterday the Social Service Women's Council met in the Y. parlors, when the following officers were elected: president, Mrs. Rae; second vice-president, Mrs. Hays; recording secretary, Mrs. Mann; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Gibson; treasurer, Mrs. Clark; executive from St. Paul's, Mrs. Hunter; Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Gallacher from Grace church; Mrs. Humphreys, Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Bryden from Knox church; Mrs. Maharg from St. Andrew's; Mrs. Rutherford and Mrs. Laidlaw from Crescent Heights; Mrs. Martin. An auditors' committee was formed consisting of Mrs. Bryden and Mrs. Colquhoun. To the board of control at present up of Rev. J. A. Clark, Rev. Shearer and Deaconess Gordon were added Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Bell. With regard to a former discussion on insuring the furniture in the two Social Service homes, Mrs. Murray named Mrs. Bell authorized to value such furniture and accept the proposition made by Messrs. Fooks, Peet and Co. for three years' insurance. As Miss Rattray had not approved of some of the plans for the new building, it was agreed that Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Rae, with Deaconess Gordon and Moffat consult with the men before the plans are put into operation.

CANADIAN CIRCUS HAS LARGEST OF TRAINED ANIMAL CIRCUSES

Barnes Circus Comes to City Next Monday and Tuesday; Long Street Parade

It probably isn't known that Canada can lay claim to having the largest trained animal circus in the world. That's a fact, nevertheless. At the head of this circus is Al. G. Barnes, the most prominent wild animal trainer and exhibitor in his profession. He was born and reared in London, Ontario.

While the Barnes circus spends a greater part of the time in foreign lands over in the States every year on a visit is made to the owner's native country. Canada produced the many why shouldn't she claim the circus? Compared with other large enterprises and accomplishments, this show and the showman rank way up at the top, both are exceptionally worthy.

An entirely new line of entertainment is offered in the program presented by this circus this season. The entire structure has been made over. More acts, more big features, more animals and more quiet dignity mark the year's progress of the show. Acts that during the past winter appeared in the leading theatres of America are on this circus program. Monster groups of wild animals, taken through a thrilling array of acts by men and women trainers, hold the audience spellbound. The next number is perhaps an educational one—Tom, Dick and Harry, the wonderful juggling sea lions. Beautiful horses and ponies—always interesting—perform all manner of fantastic stunts and dances. "Bill," the wrestling grizzly bear, then captures attention. Then the clowns have their fun—funny they are—twelve of them. Comedy elephants and other animals assist in bringing forth laughs.

The big Barnes circus comes to Calgary on Monday and Tuesday, May 26-27, and will give two performances on each day. A mile-long street parade will drive through the prominent streets each morning at 10:30.

AFTER THE SHOW

(By Constance Enroll)

"We are all clowns and have various moods for amusements, and, and Luther McCarty is no exception to the rule. The fighting man who delighted the ladies at the Majestic yesterday afternoon was very different to the conversationalist who discussed the philosophy of life at Wilson's cafeteria later in the evening. Boy, as he is, Mr. McCarty has studied men and manners, and some of his criticisms are wonderfully refreshing. Indeed the evening fight is the last thing he seems inclined to talk about, saying only, "I don't say what I'm going to do to him, but we'll both be there."

He was tickled to death with the music of the orchestra, asking them to put on special airs, and declaring earnestly that he would willingly give up his fighting strength to be able to play, and bring real music from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted real wonder from any instrument. Speaking of his past life as a teamster, he said emphatically that he had found out how good it had been for him to suffer hardships and to be hungry, and added that if more men and women had to rough it, there would be more persons of real character in the world, and more sympathy too. He expressed himself as indignant at the people who raised their eyebrows over fighting, and insisted that to be in any kind of training at all a man had to keep good hours, eat the right kind of food, and exercise. He believed that men, and especially young men, would be better physically and morally if they tried being boxers for a little while, even if they got no further than the training. Rather ashamed he owned to being a reader, and then his enthusiasm increased, declaring that he liked real live stories of adventure, but he liked them well written. In a very brief way he talked of personality, and declared that in the ring, as in any other walk of life, a man's personality counted for as much as his strength. He quoted