I can give but one reason why women on the stage are not as laugh-provoking as men and that is this: That as laughter is caused by some deformity—be it that of voice, of dress or feature, it is assiduously sought by the actor, whose whole reputation often hangs on that gentle art of self-disfigurement. Women, on the other hand, are loathe to add one blemish to their face or form, but seek to win their way to the hearts of their audience by the sweetness of their smile, the symmetry of their forms, the agility of their every movement. Perhaps some enterprising woman will some day see the advisability of grotesqueness of appearance as a laugh-provoking medium, and will make her fortune.—[Giltrey Bonnett in the Theater Magazine.
