A Lover's GERALDINE. Romance.

Waringham Hall sank into its old gloom on the day when its master and its guilty heir died within its walls. Lindley Fielding was too much overcome by the horrible end of his ac-complice to make any attempt at flight; and, upon a promise of pardon, freely offered by the man he had done so much to injure, he confessed that, upon discovering that the James Otway imprisoned for murder was Sir Charles' legitimate son, he had formed a plot with him to trade upon that fact. It was he who had suggested the by which the felon James Otvay, by hiding his face, as if in shamefaced contrition, when Mr. Massey visited him in prison, had passed himself off to the old lawyer as his inno cent namesake. He then traced the Innocent James Otway to the Cape of Good Hope, where he was living under the name of Harry Hammond, having resolved never to return to his unsym-pathetic family. The reason of Sir Charles' constant aversion to the boy was alleged by Mr. Massey to have been the open satisfaction shown by his father, Sir Charles' brother, at the less of his peasant-wife, Kathleen, whose story had come to his ears. The innocent young James Otway had married a pretty young English girl of volatile manners, who had come out to the Cape as a governess; Lindley fell in love with her, and when he found that her husband, though weak and easily led, had ideas of honor which forbade the hope of making a bargain with him for information con-cerning a nearer heir to the title, he induced the flighty little creature to run away with him. It was while smarting under the loss of his wife, of whom he was then passionately fond, that James had met Lindley on his unexpected return to the hall on the night of his uncle's death. After that event, James had again gone out to the Cape, under the advice of his treacherous namesake, who wished to get him out of the way. He there discovered that the girl he had married, young as she was, had already been the wife of another man at the time; learned later that, this first hus band being now dead, Lindley had married her on his return to England. Lindley disclaimed all participation in his accomplice's attempts to murder James. And, as the latter was inclined and a small sum of money to help him back to the Cape with his wife, with an intimation that his reappearance on the shores of his native land would James' innocence being now clearly established, he had no difficulty in obtaining undisputed possession of the Waringham estate; but the hall, now inhabited solely by his two old aunts, the younger of whom had sunk suddenly into acceptable. denly into crestfallen insignificance, owing to her share in the late conspiracy, from which she had always been plete seclusion with some relatives of her late husband, James went abroad, and few tidings of him reached his friends in England. Geraldine visited Waringham every month, to stand by her husband's grave, to pay dreary, penitential calls upon her two old aunts, and to see the poor old housekeeper, who was now sinking rapidly into childishness. It was early in the new year, some thir-teen months after Captain Morrison's ety for him.' When she rose to take leave, she renembered that she had not paid her sual visit to the conservatory, where er old friends the flowers were not ite so carefully tended as during her eign at Waringham. She went by her-self, for Elizabeth, who had aged latey, was now as much averse to exer-tion as her sister. Geraldine stopped short on the threshold, for in her old American chair sat James Otway. He jumped up and shook hands with her

Geraldine, after a few further remarks, turned back toward the diningroom, expecting him to take the natural course of accompanying her to the entrance. But he did nothing of the kind. She did not hear his footsteps following her, and was indignant at this strange lack of courtesy. At last, most un-willingly, she looked around when she was half across the room, and saw that his hands were pressed tightly in each other, and that he was watching her with an expression which moved her out of her composure. She came back slowly to the conservatory door, and, offering her hand, said:

But he sprung forward and held her fast, with his arm round her waist. "No, no, Deldee! Don't say that—for heaven's sake, don't! I love you so! Don't you care a bit about me?" "James, James, how can you ask me? Don't you know-don't you know? ember the time, since I first went to Havre, when I have not thought more about you than about anyone in the world. Heaven forgive me, James—I have loved you more than I ought!'

"And you will be my wife, Deldee, as you promised twenty years ago?" And so, twenty years after his first proposal, James Otway gained the wife he had carried off to Waringham as a little abandoned waif of three years old; and the Deldee who cheered his boyhood and rescued him from the

From the Fredericton Gleaner. Miss Alma Millar, of Upper South-N.B., is a daughter of Mr. Ezra Millar, a wealthy and influential farmer, and the young lady is a general favorite among a wide circle of acquaintances, who have had occasion to congratulate her upon her complete restoration to health, after a severe and trying illness. # PEOPLE

The first three days attracted immense crowds of eager buyers and the Big Building Sale's already a success. If downright money saving has any attraction we're right in the swim -not because we're the biggest, but because we're the best and cheapest.

CROWDED.

A Huge Success, and

In buying at the Big Departmental you run no risks. We sell nothing but reliable goods-no matter what the price may be.

And it's only natural that this business should grow bigger when such stocks at such prices have full sway.

Our preparations for this Big Building Sale are thoroughly complete for making the largest call that can possibly be made on the strength of the Big Store, and you will find us built for a long pull and a strong pull and equal to the occasion in every respect.

This sale is different to ordinary sales from the fact that it's a genuine Building Sale. We find the premises too small for our fast-growing trade, and necessity compels us to build an annex, which will give an additional selling space of nearly 15,000 square feet.

It differs from ordinary sales, because we have no old stock to work off on our customers-everything being new up to date and in keeping with the march of progress.

The most skeptical will admit now that the heated term has been here, and, no doubt, will stay with us. We have the summer goods you require to keep cool in and at Building Sale prices. Come with the crowd and keep cool.
