Dominion Day.

Tomorrow is the natal day of the Dominion. Thirty-five years ago was witnessed the final process in the forging of the chain that now binds the erstwhile segregated provinces of Canada in an harmonious confederation.

While Canada is entering upon a new era of development which will make the rate of progress in the past seem slow by contrast, still the achievements since Confederation have been truly remarkable.

In 1868, the Federal revenue amounted to $13,687,928; the expenditure, $13,484,092. In 1901 the revenue was $52,514,701, and the expenditure, $46,895,368.

The population of Canada, at the first taking of the census after Confederation, was 2,485,761; according to the last Dominion census it was nearly 5,400,000.

In 1871 the imports amounted to $73,459,644, and exports to $57,567,888; that is, our imports exceeded our exports by nearly sixteen million dollars.

In 1887 Canada had only 3,000 miles of steam railways; today there are 19,000 miles in operation, and hundreds of miles building.

In 1868 the sea-going shipping entered and cleared at Canadian ports was 4,319,321 tons; last year it was 14,548,062 tons.

In 1868 there were 3,633 postoffices in Canada; last year 9,834. The total of letters posted was 18,100,000 in 1868 and 191,650,000 in 1901.

The life insurance in force in Canada in 1869 was $35,680,082; in 1901, $406,496,856.

The total deposit in Canadian banks increased between 1868 and 1901 from $34,653,594 to $349,573,327; the note circulation from $9,350,646 to $50,601,205; and the bank assets from $79,860,976 to $551,829,324.

The deposits in the Government savings banks in the same time have risen from $5,057,607 to $75,174,056; the amount per capita from $1.50 to $13.95; and the number of depositors from 2,102 to 157,368.

Figures like these illustrate the economic progress of the country, but they do not tell the whole story. Politically, the most outstanding fact in the past 35 years has been the growth of the imperial idea, and the conviction that Canada will work out her destiny within the British Empire, not in the status of a colony, but as one of a group of free nations owning a common allegiance to the British crown.

That 7,000 Canadians would go to fight the battles of the mother country on the other side of the world, is something that could not have entered the imagination a few years ago. It demonstrates that organic union is not essential to the co-operation of the component parts of the Empire when its integrity is assailed, but that race and affection are the strongest and surest ties.

Since Confederation the Dominion has had internal as well as external problems. With her own strength she has crushed two rebellions. Almost as dangerous have been difficulties of race and creed, which have been composed, finally, it is hoped, through the spirit of toleration among Canadian people and the statesmanship of their public men.

The past 35 years have been fruitful for the Dominion, but in all that relates to material progress they promise to be greatly transcended by the next 35. At Confederation the great Northwest was only a geographical expression; but with the tide of population now rolling in, who can predict what is in store for Canada even ten years hence?

The Heroes of the Well.

Our cheers, our laurels, our memorials, are usually reserved for the heroes of war. It seems we like heroism finely staged, and there is nothing like the battlefield for that.

Some have said that it is not the willingness to kill, but to be killed, that constitutes the real heroism of the soldier, and wins adoration. All honor to the brave boys who so nobly demonstrated the possession of this virtue at Paardeberg, and Hart's River; but all honor, too, to the humble heroes of peace, to the man who will risk his own life to save another's in simple obedience to a God-given instinct, without thought of reward or of self.

The sublimest qualities of courage are latent in many natures which seem commonplace enough; but these qualities are suddenly brought to the surface by some untoward event, and the man whom we thought commonplace stands transfixed. We see this in the episode in a neighboring county, where five workmen performed astonishing feats of endurance, and took their lives in their hands, in the effort to rescue a fellow-man from a living death.

John Carnie, Wm. Thomson, John Blanchard, Henry Allan, George Wentworth and Richard Doyle—their names cannot be too well known—are heroes of the loftiest type. They had none of the incidents of the battlefield to fire the blood and the passions, but only one motive, to save a fellow-creature at whatever cost to themselves. Such men raise the dignity of human nature.

Impressions of the Yukon. The Popular Science Monthly for July contains an article by Professor Miers, of Oxford University, on Gold Mining in the Klondike.

Professor Miers, on the invitation of Hon. Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior, journeyed to the gold country last summer on a semi-scientific mission. A record from the pen of such a noted mineralogist is instructive, as well as interesting.

Dawson City, only four years ago a collection of huts at the confluence of the Yukon and Klondike rivers, is described as a town of "about 10,000 inhabitants, consisting, it is true, of wooden buildings and chiefly of log cabins, but possessing hotels, clubs, theaters, sawmills, large stores, electric light, telephones, power works and all the resources of modern civilization.

Speaking of the mineral deposits, the writer states that gold has been exclusively won from the gravels in the valleys, and not from the quartz veins. In other words, mining operations are confined to placer deposits. Very little auriferous, or gold-bearing, quartz, has so far been found, though many quartz claims have been staked.

Yet the theory is that the gold in the valley gravels must have been derived from quartz veins. The ultimate prosperity of the country, according to Professor Miers, depends upon the extent to which auriferous quartz may be discovered, and the other resources developed. But despite the apparent dearth of gold quartz, the placer deposits are by no means becoming exhausted. There is yet a considerable quantity of ground to be worked in the Klondike creeks, to which attention has been drawn by the extraordinary wealth of that area. The whole of the Yukon territory is gold-bearing, and will in time come under the eye of the prospector.

Not Stuck on Maxims. [Toledo Bee.] "There is always room at the top." "Yes, but I'd rather get in on the ground floor."

The Poor Fellow. [Chicago American.] "Why do you cry, my poor man?" "I want to ask for some pie, some pudding and some turkey, but I can't get up courage. Boo hoo!"

The Conversation Maker. [Washington Star.] Kiekin' 'bout the weather. "That's my greatest fun—Kiekin' when it's overcast. An' Kiekin' at the sun. Kiekin' when it rains! Kiekin' when it's dry. Kiekin' when the wind is low. An' Kiekin' when it's high. Kiekin' at the north win. Kiekin' at the south. Always apprehensive. Of a fresher or a drouth. Kiekin' 'nigh an' mornin' 'Till the air is blue. If 'twasn't for the weather I wonder what I'd do!"

Taking No Chances. [Chicago Tribune.] "What provision have you made?" "Inquired the possible renter, "in case of fire?" "We carry ample insurance," said the agent of the cheap apartment house.

Majnet, Not Malice. [Judge.] Attorney—Did you see the plaintiff hit the defendant? Witness—Oh did, sor. Attorney—And was the assault committed with malice aforethought? Witness—No, sor; it wor committed wid a malice behind th' ear.

Shakespeare Ping-Pong. [Judge.] If ping-pong be the fool of love, play on! Give me too much of it, that, satiate. My state for it may fire out and ramoose. That ball again? It had a ping-pong sound. Oh, it struck on my ear like old-time bonings. That I received when I was but a lad, Taking and giving lickings.

The Conservative Convention. [Toronto Star.] The Conservative convention has its excuse in the weather. Something must Poems the World Has Read.

June. [James Russell Lowell.]

"And what is so rare as a day in June?" is James Russell Lowell's most famous line. Considering the June weather we have had this year, the poem has its humorous side, but we give it as a fine specimen of verse:

And what is so rare as a day in June? Then, if ever, come perfect days; Then heaven tries her warm if it be in tune, And over it softly her warm ear lays; Whether we look, or whether we listen, We hear life murmur, or see it gladden; Every clod feels a stir of might, An instinct within it that reaches and towers, And groping blindly above it for light, Climbs to a soul in glass and flowers; The flush of life may well be seen Thriving back over hills and valleys; The cowslip starts in meadow greens; The butter-cup catches the sun in its chalice,

And there's never a leaf nor a blade too mean To bloom the happy creature's palace; The little bird sits at his door in the sun, Aitil like a blossom among the leaves, And lets his illumined being o'errun With the deluge of summer it receives; His mate feels the eggs beneath her wings, And the heart in her dumb breast flutters and sings; He sings to the wide world, and she to her nest— In the lilce car of nature, which song is the best?

Thoughtless Gran'ma. [Judge.] Master—What are you crying for? Office Boy—My grandmother's dead, and she's going to be buried on a holiday.

Girls Wanted. [Johannesburg Star.] In a new country an influx of women from home, apart altogether from its economic importance, is to be desired on higher grounds. Women, especially women with an English training, are a humanizing and a civilizing influence; and, more than that, they are a potent instrument in the Anglicizing of the English sentiment of a colony and strengthening those ideal ties which bind the mother country and her daughters into one imperial whole.

Rough on the Duke. [Hamilton Herald.] Again the Duke of Marlborough is mentioned as a probable successor of Lord Minto at Ottawa. Let there be a general protest against this appointment. In the first place, the fussy little duke is not a man of sufficient intellectual caliber for the office of governor-general of Canada. In the second place, the little duke's wife is a New York girl, and her presence in Canada as the first lady of the land would be likely to subject Canada to insufferable patronage from the American snobocracy.

Elbow Power. [Chicago Tribune.] "I tell you," said the doctor, "it's the man who can push himself along who succeeds best in this world." "Not at all," replied the other. "It's the man who can shove others out of his way who succeeds best."

The Individual. [S. E. Kiser.] A leaf falls, but the winds blow on. A bark is mute somewhere in the sea. Men know not that a song is gone, Or that a branch is bare. If Atlas to some other god His awful care resigned, Men still would strut and tote the hod. The world would never mind. We do not miss the dead bird's song. Nor note the leaf that goes; Mayhap when Morgan dies ere long The void he leaves will close.

Passed Up the Chance. [Chicago News.] Attorney—According to her last will your last wife seems to have made no provision for you, Mr. Enpeck. Enpeck—Is that so? Attorney—Yes, but she has left several thousand dollars to charity, and there is a chance for you to break the will. Enpeck—Well, I'm not going to try. I couldn't break her will while she was alive, and I am not the man to tribute to King Edward. [New York World.] The British nation will certainly suffer a great loss if the coronation of a sovereign so ripe in experience, so potentially influential in keeping her at peace with other great nations, and withal so full of kindly sympathy with those movements at home that make for the social uplifting of the people, is forever postponed. Other nations will share the earnest wishes of his own subjects for King Edward's restoration to health. He has impressed the general judgment of mankind as a monarch who, with common sense and remarkable ability in international affairs, and of such amiable character and broadly human sympathies as would make his reign good for the British people and good also for the rest of the world.

HOPE NOW TAKES THE PLACE OF FORMER FEAR AND DOUBT. (Continued from page 1.) lighted with such evidence of the King's improvement. Throughout the United Kingdom all religious denunciations made similar intercession for the sovereign's recovery. SIR WILFRID AND LADY LAURIER. Mgr. Merry Del Val, the papal envoy to the coronation of King Edward, conducted a service in Brompton Oratory this afternoon, his congregation including Sir Wilfrid and Lady Laurier and other Canadians.

A TIME FOR REJOICING. Bonfires Throughout the Country to Be Lighted Tonight. TIME FOR REJOICING. Lord Cranborne authorizes the following statement: "The King is rapidly getting better, and the moment, therefore, seems most appropriate for public rejoicing. As chairman of the bonfires committee, I suggest that bonfires throughout the country be lighted Monday night."

A dispatch to the London Daily Mail from Copenhagen says that Queen Alexandra has invited the deputation of Danish Hussars to return to London the end of September for the coronation of the King. Buckingham Palace has worn a gay appearance to-day than for a week past, and the constant coming and going of royalty and streams of carriages bore testimony of the feeling of increased confidence that the King would recover. In the afternoon a party of princesses drove to Sheen House, Richmond, and the Prince and Princess of Wales paid a long visit to Buckingham Palace. This evening the Queen and the royal ladies dined within light of the public through the windows in the front of the palace, thousands of people being gathered in the space in front of the building. The King today was again successfully transferred from his bed to a movable couch. Several postponed functions are being arranged.

LONDON'S ILLUMINATION. The illumination fixtures attached to the fronts of buildings are being generally retained, anticipating that they will be lighted up when the expected announcement of the certainty of King Edward's recovery is issued. In other respects London is assuming normal conditions. Newcastle and some of the smaller towns in England were illuminated tonight in celebration of His Majesty's progress toward recovery.

GOOD WISHES FROM TRANSVAAL. Among the numerous telegrams received the King was specially gratified by a dispatch from a large meeting of Transvaalers at Balmoral, embodying a prayer that the Almighty restore him to health and grant him and the Queen "health, wealth and long to live." Queen Alexandra received Whiteley Reid, the special ambassador of the United States, and Mrs. Reid, at Buckingham Palace Saturday afternoon in farewell audience. FRENCH FEELING. Gn. de Gallifet, the former minister of war, has written to the Journal des Debats the following sympathetic letter to King Edward, which concludes: "We cannot forget what he did during the Franco-Prussian war in helping our sick and wounded. To him, to his august mother, we should remain grateful. Moreover, when it was a question of good and noble action, he, Prince of Wales, was always powerfully seconded by the most charming and charitable of women. In this domain she reigned long before she became Empress Alexandra, the pearl of England."

CONFLICTING EMOTIONS. Last Week One of Jubilation, Fear, Doubt and Hope. A week which has witnessed emotions of such conflicting and intense character as to be without parallel in the nation's history is ending, as it began, in rejoicing. Englishmen themselves can scarcely realize that in a brief space of five days the country has gone through the most acute stages of jubilation, fear, doubt, and hope. Now they are all talking of the festivities, many of which will take place as planned. The Crystal Palace, July 2, will be the scene of the brilliant hospital ball. On July 4 the India Office will be transformed, with Oriental decorations, into a ballroom for the Asiatic reception, when the Prince of Wales is expected to welcome the visitors, and London's poor are eagerly looking forward to their free coronation dinner. Among the disappointed standstillers and other sections of the public there is a strong desire to have a parade, with Lord Kitchener as the central figure. Such an arrangement would doubtless attract many thousands to London. The metropolis and the country are quite ready to go wild over Kitchener. But he is likely to endeavor to dodge any public shows. Falling Kitchener the standstillers have to rely upon the King's first public reappearance, which is likely to be a drive through the streets to the national thanksgiving service.

Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia and his suite left London Saturday morning to join the German flagships at Portsmouth. The Prince of Wales bade farewell to his cousin at the station. A large crowd of people gave Prince Henry a hearty send-off.

Sleeplessness. You can't sleep in the calmest and stiller night if your stomach is weak, circulation poor and digestion bad. Hopson's Food purifies the stomach, improves the circulation, purges the system and brings about that condition in which sleep is regular and refreshing. It does not do this in a day, but it does it—has done it in thousands of cases. It "takes two to make a quarrel," and generally one of them is a fool.
