

But let me say, here again, that to make soiling profitable, (1st) proximity to the stables, (2nd) thorough cultivation, (3rd) heavy manuring, (4th) systematized, intelligent, pertion and proper husbanding of an abundance of farm manure, which will grow—besides soiling crops—heavy crops of grain, roots, hay, &c., provided too much grain cultivation and too severing labour are indispensable. Under these conditions, soiling means heavy cash returns, provided the produce—be it calves, pork, poultry, and milk, butter or cheese—be properly managed as well. Successful soiling, also, means the producseanty manuring be not attempted on that portion of the farm.

Farmers may ask where all the farm manure mention above will come from. The answer is plain: From your cow.
