The Question of Spoons.
When the Government introduced the protective tarif they did so on the principle that "THEYWOULDEITHER MIAKE A SPOON OR SPOIL A HORN." The great authorities in Par liament and in the press have not yet decided which result will happen, and somed consider it doubtful if it shall ever be unanimously decided. Of more imbe unanimously decided. Of more importance, however, to the families of our people-when gathered at their breakfast table quaffing their tea and coffee-of uncertain price-to know that the CELE. BRATED NICKELITE SILVER SPOONS are still within thior reach. The Governnent laid their hands fearlissly upon the clothing we wear, the food we eat, and the fuel we consume; they taxed by the dollar and by the pound, ad valorem and specific, but "woodman spare that tree," they spared the Nickelite Spoons, by just leaving them among the revenue tar iff lists.
These celebrated Sheffield spoons and forks are the result of years of labour, experience and capital. They require, to produce them, heavy and expensive machinery, and they require the world for a market. They are adapted to all climates, from the extreme North to the mates, from the extreme North to the
