

is used for a variety of purposes, and answers well for paint. It constitutes, likewise, one of the most ornamental and characteristic trees of the forest, visible at a great distance by the paleness and whiteness of its verdure, and hence the name of Aleurites given to it by Forster, from its mealy appearance. It grows rapidly and affords a fine shade, producing leaves which resemble those of the Plane Tree.

END OF VOL. I. OF NUTTALL.