They say, The Case, as it stands between Parties, amounts: to no more at present, than an Accusation without Doors; what it may be, is another Question. That it is a Maxim in Equity, that no Man ought to be publickly censur'd without Evidence; and it is a Maxim in Law, That no Man ought to be condemned without a Trial; both which Maxims are now destroy'd by these tumultuous Accusations: They fay, they have no Recourse, but to declare their Innocence; and complain feriously of the Hardship they suffer, by being thus treated: THEY SAT, that they fuffer the most unexampled Usage in this Matter; that they have never entertained the least Intelligence with the Pretender, or with any Person in his Behalf; that they never failed of their Duty, in doing every thing that was needful, and in their Power, to oppose and resist him; that if any thing was, at any Time, offered against his Interest, either in or out of Parliament, they always join'd with it, and came into all the Measures which
