Fine Agricultural Country and Fruit Growing Awaits Only the Diligent Labor—Impressions of St. John and Fredericton  (Aberdeen Free Press).  The river St. John does not rank amongst the large rivers of Canada. In the matter of size it does not enter into comparison with the St. Lawrence, the Mackenzie or the Fraser. But none the less it is a big river, the largest, in fact, on the Atlantic seaboard of North America, if the St. Lawrence be excepted. It is navigable for 150 miles from its mouth, and on its banks are situated the two chief cities of the province of New Brunswick, namely the capital, Fredericton, and	doing business at our present stand (cor. It has, more over, all the dignity of a large continental river, and the charming scenery which lines its course makes its valley singularly attractive.  The City  The traveller who approaches from the sea the city of St. John, where the river flows into the Bay of Fundy, is apt to get an erroneous impression of the province of which that city is the principal seaport. He sees a busy town spreading up steel slopes; it has factory chimneys and bustling wharves, all indicative of industrial activity. Lumber lies piled about in immense quantities, evidence, if such were required, of the premier position which New Brunswick occupies as a lumbering province. The rocky heights, however, behind and around St. John make it look like a rockbound city, and make the traveller fancy that the hinterland of such a town must necessarily be a wild and inhospitable sort of country. Nothing, however, could be further from the case. The seenery about the mouth of the St. John river may be what is styled "romantic"	account, thus our setting expense is kept down to a minimum. The estuary of the river St. John forms the busy harbor of the city of the same name. It is one of the two winter ports of Canada used by the trans-Atlantic liners when the St. Lawrence navigation is closed; and being the terminus on this side of the Canadian Pacific Railway it is in direct connection with Montreal and the west. Here there are large immigration sheds, and all facilities for dealing with ocean traffic on a big scale. So rapidly has the traffic of the port increased that preparations are now being made for the opening up of an entirely new harbor, on the northward side	spital  this part of the valley is situated arming city of Fredericton, the capithe province. Fronting the river, is here spanned by a long bridge, ne of the most attractive of the cit-castern Canada. The River  From St. John it is possible, as said, the property of the sail upstream for 150 miles, that is to say, as far as the town of Woodstock.  A good steamboat service is maintained on the river during summer, that on the lower eighty-four miles between Fredericton and St. John being a daily one, and the sail up the river in fine summer weather is without doubt one of the most rate of enjoyable things of the kind which the within American continent has to offer. A great future awaits this district as a fruit-growing centre; and admirable exchards are to be seen at such places as Burton, which await but one thing, the labor of the diligent fruit-grower, to make them yield as copiously as any in Eastern Canada. Considering the climate and the qualities of the soil, land may be bought here, and indeed throughout the whole St. John Valley, on very reasonable terms.
