A Martyr to Principle

(Chicago Tribune).

At the meeting of the Illinois Bar Association at the Hotel La Salle Judge Theodore Brentano of the superior court told of a case tried before him several years ago at which the late Jim Evans, a widely known and universally liked newspaper writer, was a witness. Evans had given important evidence and the opposing attorney was doing his best to shake his testimony.

He had made Evans go back over his past life and was questioning him regarding the different positions he had held. Jim was telling of a period of his early newspaper days when he had held many places and none for long.

"Then where did you go?" thundered the lawyer after Evans had told of working a few days in the southwest.

"To Dallas, Texas. Worked two weeks," replied Evans.

"Why did you change?" asked the lawyer.

"My boss and I could not agree upon a question of national policy," was the answer.

"Then where did you go?"

"To New Orleans. Left there in a week," replied Evans.

"And what was the reason this time?"

"Same thing," answered Evans with a smile. "The proprietor and I found that we did not agree upon a political question of national importance."

The same answer was given as Evans told of numerous other places he had taken and given up. The attorney finally gave up his attempt to break down Evans with the remark: "You must be a hard man to get along with if you have such set political ideas."

A few days after the case had been decided Judge Brentano met Evans on the street.

"Say, Jim," he asked, "what was that question of national importance that cost you so many jobs? What did you and your boss disagree over?"

"Prohibition," answered Evans with a smile.

"Why did you change?" asked the lawyer.

"My boss and I could not agree upon a question of national policy," was the answer.

BARRIE, PINERO AND SHAW

Three in One Evening is The Scheme of Frohman In London

THE ENGLISH STAGE

Shakespeare as Never Before Is Dream of Granville Barker—Tree's Plans—Constance Calverly May Be Seen on the Operatic Stage

(Times Special Correspondence)

London, June 29.—I have rarely seen Charles Frohman more excited or better pleased with himself than as he sat in his room at the Savoy today talking about his sensational scheme for the union of J. M. Barrie, Sir Arthur Pinero and Bernard Shaw in the same programme. As he himself fully admits, sentiment played a considerable part in the proceeding. With Shaw, Frohman's relations in the past have been comparatively slight, but both Barrie and Pinero owe much to him, just as he is enormously indebted to them. You may take it that even had he approached more largely upon their indebtedness he would not have met with a refusal.

One would like to know how the question of fees has been settled; but upon that point Frohman was silent. Probably he had only to suggest conditions in order to have them accepted. And now we shall all look forward to the end of September and the reopening of the Duke of York's in order to discover whether or not Pinero, Barrie and Shaw in combination can give us a better entertainment than each of these three dramatists separately. Manifestly there must be something of a spirit of rivalry in the proceedings but it will be a kindly, courteous and tolerant spirit. It will be particularly interesting to see to which of the trio the public allots highest honors.

In the coming autumn, Granville Barker is to give us a series of revivals of Shakespeare's plays. He will begin with "Macbeth" and "A Winter's Tale." Barker is solid in his belief that he can present Shakespeare's works as they have never yet been presented on the stage. Years ago he came by this conviction and he has cherished it ever since. "Whether the experiment succeeds or not," he said the other day, "it's going to be great fun for us all."

That is how Barker looks at things. Although he is a most serious minded person when he takes pen in hand, he is like a schoolboy out for a holiday in the theatre. The Kingsway, where he will revive "The Voyage Inheritance" in September, is, of course, much too small for him to put his Shakespearean ideas into practice, and the chance of a holiday is settled yet.

Tree has at last officially announced his intention of doing Louis N. Parker's historical play "Drake" at His Majesty's Theatre. "Drake" is a play of the late Elizabethan period, and Tree, who has been showing no great alacrity in closing with the proposal, although it is fairly certain that he will eventually do so. Phyllis Neilson Terry is to appear as Queen Elizabeth, rather a youthful Elizabeth, but I dare say she will contribute to make up to the requisite age, which, after all, was not very formidable.

Tree, on the other hand, will go on the road until the end of the year. By the bye, his eldest daughter Viola is to be married in about a fortnight. She is to marry a young man named Mr. John, not making, by any means, a great match; her fiancé is, in fact, but indifferently endowed with worldly goods. Still, there is plenty of love on both sides to make amends. Viola, nevertheless, is in no way disposed to allow matrimony to interfere with the pursuit of her profession. A little after the wedding she will go to Italy again to continue her musical studies, while her husband remains in London. A few weeks ago she made her debut under the name of Viola Valdes as a vocalist in "Traviata" in a little town on the Italian frontier. On the stage, however, she has, however, been just a little reticent.

Appropos, Constance Calverly is also meditating a plunge into grand opera. She confided to me a day or two ago that she had long ago decided to make public what she had long ago decided to make public. Whether it concerns her appearance on the operatic stage or not, I cannot say. It is the same confidential manner Winifred Emery whispered to me that she is soon to take up dramatic work again, and that consequently she has abandoned her design to appear on the vaudeville stage. Further details will be forthcoming later.

Girls From Norway

(St. Andrew's Beacon).

Good progress is being made with the building of the new sardine boat, also the boarding house.

The stand-pipe which is to provide water for the new sardine boat, has been erected alongside the track. It will supply the purest of fresh water by gravity for the various buildings.

The help problem is to be solved by the importation of girls from Norway and elsewhere. It is expected that 120 girls will leave Norway about the first of August. These girls are of a superior type and are accustomed to the handling of fish. In addition to local help, it is likely that men and women will be brought here from Nova Scotia fishing villages.

The company has already bought large orders for sardines, clams and other products of sea and shore that it proposes canning.

HE HAD REASONS

"Jimson isn't married, is he?" asked Smythe.

"No," replied Blythe; "he's much too clever."

"How do you make that out?"

"Well, he tests everything by Euclid, and he says that any two things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another."

"I don't see what that's got to do with it," said Smythe, puzzled.

"Well, I'm not quite clear about it myself," remarked Blythe; "but Jimson says that a maid is a spinster, and a spinster is therefore a maid must be a spinster; therefore a maid must be a spinster, and he won't marry an insect!"

Cuts New Teeth at 89

Newark, N. J., July 11.—Jonathan H. Cole, of South Plainfield, celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday this week with unusual glee because, he informed his friends, he is cutting new teeth. Twenty years ago he procured a set of false teeth and had no trouble until three weeks ago, when he suffered severe pains. A dentist removed the false teeth and began treatment, but discovered that the pains were due to the cutting of full sets of lower and upper teeth.

OH, CRUEL LOVE

There was a sound of revelry by night: The Blogges were giving a party.

Mr. Bloggs had just obliged with the touching ballad, "The Love That Makes the World Go Round," and Master Bloggs seized the opportunity to sneak behind a screen with father's pipe.

SHORTLY AFTERWARDS

it was observed that Willie wasn't well. His face was pallid, and his eyes stood out. Cried Mrs. Bloggs: "Robinson! 'No. How was the old man affected?"

do believe you've been smoking!" Willie feebly shook his head.

"Taint that, ma," he replied, untruthfully. "If it's true what father's been singing about, I-I must—be—in—love!"

PARTNERS IN CRIME

Jones: "Did you know that the oldest of Price's seven daughters had eloped?"

Robinson: "No. How was the old man affected?"

Oh, he took on dreadfully at first; then he found out that everyone knew he had bought the girl's railway ticket."
