> Portland, Me, Cannot Get Coal at Any Price

Any Prios (Portland Press, Thursday.) A conservative estimate of the situa-tion is that not more than one family in haif a dozen has a supply of hard coal. There is not a pound of it that can be bought in the city and the deal-ers have been driven nearly frantic this week in explaining to their customers these conditions. Streams of people have been calling at the offices of the dealers this week and offering high prices for coal while the telephones to these offices have been ringing all of the time. But nothing can be done as the dealers are not able at any price to upply the demana.

maiden of the Moated Grange, he was a-weary. But he had once been a lit-tle boy, wide-eyed and eager, longing for the coming of Christmas, with its gifts and good cheer, and when the day comes round again and the faces of other little children glow with hap-piness the wish of yesterday will be discounted at least when years. There are certain our littles of New Year's gifts which the citizens as a whole would appreciate, but which are likely to be delayed. There is a new assessment law, for example, for which the stocking has been hung up a long time. Then there is the manual train-ing school, which has come down the chimney of many smaller civic houses than ours. There is also the abatioir, which appears at present to be a childed mat proposition. Following the ex-ample of children, who invariably in their letters to Santa Claus ask for much more than they get, the citizens might mention an improved ferry ser-vice or bridge to Carleton, a dry dock, some new wharves on the west side, a dredge, and, perhaps, an occasional victory for the city in a lawsuit or ar-bitration case. But perhaps there is no gift the individual citizen would so much appreciate as a license to tell the new telephone what he thinks of it.

prices, for coal while the telephones to these offices have been ringsing all of the time. But nothing can be done as the dealers are not able at any price to supply the demand. Today the bargs Robesonia is ex-pected to arrive at this port with 1500 tons of coal for the the A. R. Wright Co. The Randall & McAllister Co. also expect a cargo of 1500 tons today. These lots of coal, however, will be dis-posed of in quick order and will not come anywhere near being able to satisfy the demands of the Portland people. This lot that will come for the Randall & McAllister company was contracted for as long ago as last April. One of the Portland dealers in speak-ing of the situation yesterday after-noon said that the trouble was that almost all of the coal at the mines is being sent across the lakes and is go-ing to the west. All of the dealers stated that it was simply impossible to get any anthracite and that this criti-cal condition of affairs was likely to continue for the greater part of the winter. Think that it will be at least March before we get coal in large enough quantities," said the manager of one of the largest concerns. There is a limited supply of soft coal in the market and this will ide over the situation in a measure. This kind of coal is selling for $8 a ton, at least 25 higher than it has ever been before. Some of the grades of this soft coal are not fit for domestic use. Hard wood is selling in the city for $10 a cord. There is probably enough of this last for a time but for the last two years it has been scarce com-pared with former years. The price this winter is the same as it was years ago but two years ago it was selling for $8 a cord. Because of the inability to get any more coal the Forest Fibre Co, of Yarmouth yesterday was colling to shut down. One of the leading state officials telephoned to one of the large Portland dealers yesterday asking if coal in some way, could not sag secured for him. This official was willing to pay any price for anthracite. But the anewer was sen thack tha The despatches tell of another sharp decline in stocks, with margins wiped out and heavy losses sustained in Toronto and Montreal. It is the old story Men not accustomed to speculation get the notion in their heads that they can make money faster by a lucky purchase of stock than in ordinary commercial operations. Clerks or men in offices, having a balance to their credit, are bitten by the speculative mania and begin to put up margins on "a sure thing." Professional men make a purfrozen up.

SATURDAY SERMONETTE. "He wins who laughs."

The doctors tell us that a hearty laugh is as good as a medicine; that it aus the digestive organs in their func-lions; has a be eficial effect upon the hungs, and in divers and sundry other ways is a healthy exercise, besides hav-ing the merit of being a cheap one. And the doctors ought to know some-thus about 0.

ing the merit of being a cheap one. And the doctors ought to know some-thing about it. But not only are the physical results of laughter worthy of mention, for mentally as well it sometimes acts as a tonic to the worn-out nerves and thred mind. Sometimes a laugh will do more than anything else to drive the sob-webs from the brain and set things right. How many times when it is a toss up whether to laugh or cry, and a slight thing turns the scales in the favor of the laughter, do we find that though the laughter, do we find that though the laughter, do we find that drive away a touch of ill humor. If we give the laughter a chance, it will, even though it may not be altogether spontaneous, after a moment be joined in by the other party to the disagree-ment—or whatever it may be—and by it ment-or whatever it may be-and by i we will usually find that all traces o mont-or whatever it may be-and by it we will usually find that all traces of the annoyance are swept away. It is always better to laugh at a foke, even though it is as stale as a last year's calendar, for that is what jokes are for, and their mission is not ac-complished if they are not appreciated. But more than that is it wise-even though harder-to laugh when the joke is aimed at oneself. The person who looks on the best side of life, and can always see something to tickle the risibles, even in misfor-tune, usually gets along a little better than the individual who never laughs except when forced into it, and then under protest, so to speak. It helps life along amasingly to be brave and bright, even when facing difficulties; helps not only one's self but others who see us daily; and he who is blessed with the disposition to give a joke and take it, to pass the laugh along, thereby giving occasion for a dose of laughter-medicine, is a real benefactor to the human race.
