THE BRIDE OF LLEWELLYN

By Mrs. E. Southworth

case I was not to give you the letter at all. But seeing now that you will still remember him, and look forward with anxiety to his return, I think it best to give you the letter with its explanation."

And so, saying, Mrs. Llewellyn left the weeping girl and went into the house, whence she soon returned bringing the fatal letter.

"You know your father's handwriting," Gladys said, the lady, as she put the letter into the hands of the phan's hands.

"Oh, yes yes," sighed Gladys, as she looked at the superscription and pressed it to her lips.

"Read it then."

Gladys did not need this direction. She quickly broke the seal, and eagerly devoured the contents of the letter.

It was addressed on the inside To My Beloved and Only Child Gladys from her Dying Father.

My darling:—I write this from my chamber of death! When it reaches your eyes, the heart that dictates it, the hand that traces it, will be cold and stiff forever more.

It will come to you then as a message from the grave. As such let it be heeded. My Gladys you never disobeyed me while living, and I feel sure that you will never disregard my dying command—a command laid on you, my dearest child, for your own happiness alone! You know how strongly I have always been opposed to your misguided fancy for young Arthur Powis, but you do not know how anxiously I have desired your union with a certain other. I adjure you, therefore, Gladys, as you value the blessing of your dead father, as you dread his curse, to break off all correspondence with young Powis, and to make up your mind to receive as your destined husband my esteemed young friend James Stukely, the son of my beloved sister-in-law, your honored aunt, Mrs. Jay Llewellyn. And that just in the degree in which you receive and obey this, my command may the Lord bless you, in this world and the next, as the prayer of your loving father.

GRIFITH LLEWELLYN—The letter fluttered from her relaxing fingers and fell to the floor. And she gazed out into vacancy with blank consternation depicted upon every feature of her white and motionless face.

"Well, Gladys! What do you think now?" inquired Mrs. Llewellyn. She started out of her trance of amazement and answered wildly. "Madam, I do not know what to think, except that I must be mad. My father never wrote that letter. Oh, no, no. My father never could have written that letter. He never could have stabbed his child to the heart like that."

"Gladys!"

"Ah, forgive me! I forgot! I forgot that it was you who said he wrote it. I beg your pardon, Aunt Jay. But I am bewildered. It is all so strange. Oh, I wish Arthur were only here to consult with me. Oh, I hope I am not going mad. But I must be losing my reason since I cannot understand this at all!" And Gladys threw her hands up to her head, reeled and sank down upon the settee. She had not fainted however. A glass of water, brought to her by Mrs. Llewellyn, helped to restore her strength.

"Thank you, madam," she said when she had drunk the water, and returned the glass. "I will go to my room now, and try to understand this. Give me the letter, please."

And she arose and took the letter from Mrs. Llewellyn's hand and retired.

That cruel letter was almost the death-warrant to Gladys. She could not believe in it, yet she dared not doubt it. She was half crazed with her perplexity, and she prayed for the return of Arthur that she might show him her letter, and read his and that they might together seek some solution of the mystery, for notwithstanding Mrs. Llewellyn's explanation, a mystery it remained to her. She did not leave her room again that afternoon, and she did not sleep a moment that night.

In the morning however, she came to breakfast but looking pale, haggard and hollow-eyed, like one just risen from a grievous fit of illness.

Mrs. Llewellyn kissed her tenderly, but did not allude to the subject of the letter; and Gladys, for her part, shrunk from it.

After breakfast Mrs. Llewellyn retired to write a summons to her son, who was now at the Virginia University.

And Gladys, with the restlessness of one half-distracted with anxiety put on her little black hat—she was still in deep mourning for her father—and strolled out upon the front lawn.

Nearly an hour she had spent in wandering listlessly among the shaded walks of the beautiful grounds when happening to look up, she saw a dust in the road skirt—she still looked a horseman's came in view.

Then, suddenly, with a wild cry of joy, she bounded from the spot

Prompt Answering is Most Helpful

WHEN you call a number and get no answer, you come to one of two conclusions: either

The party you want is not within sound of his telephone bell; or

"Central" has failed to ring the right number.

The fact sometimes is that your party has heard the bell, but has been so slow in answering that you grow tired of waiting and hang up. Later he may tell you quite truthfully that he was not beyond the sound of his telephone bell all day. You are satisfied that "Central" was at fault.

Prompt answering when the telephone bell rings is a great aid to the service. The person calling is pleased when you answer promptly and will likely show it in the pleasant way he speaks. You in turn are cheered by his pleasant voice, and the ensuing conversation is helpful to both.

Prompt answering when the bell rings is indispensable to good service.

In company with John Wells he started an implement and wagon repair shop, which they conducted until last spring when he had to quit owing to sickness. He leaves behind his wife, one son and three daughters. The funeral was headed by the local Band, the Fire Brigade and the Order of Foresters, and was attended by many friends and relatives from outside points such as: Kitchener, New Hamburg, Waterloo, Elmwood, Hampden, Ayton, Warton, Wellesley and Sask.

PAIN, PAIN, PAIN STOP NEURALGIA

Rub nerve torture, pain and all misery right out with "St. Jacobs Liniment."

You are to be pitied—but remember that neuralgia torture and pain is the easiest thing in the world to stop. Please don't continue to suffer; it's so needless. Get from your druggist the small trial bottle of "St. Jacobs Liniment"; pour a little in your hand and gently rub the "tender nerve" or sore spot, and instantly—yes, immediately—all pain, ache and soreness is gone. "St. Jacobs Liniment" conquers pain—it is perfectly harmless and doesn't burn or discolor the skin. Nothing else gives relief so quickly. It never fails to stop neuralgia pain instantly, whether in the face, head or any part of the body. Don't suffer!
