This was in the sixteenth century but coffee was brought from Abyssinia, from the district known as Kaffa in the fourteenth century. The Arabs had it first and cultivated extensively, and the name "Mocha" which is still used commercially—although practically no Mocha is imported to this or any European country—is an echo of the times when the Levantine port of that name was the great coffee mart of the world.

To the Arab coffee remains the supreme "entertainment of good-fellowship" to this day; no matter how far you may travel into the dust and sand-laden fastnesses of the Bedouin, there will you find the little hot potential. The plaintiffs won their case, the deiendants being awarded fifty pounds out of a counterclaim of thirty-two thousand pounds damages. It has been estimated that the costs amounted to eighteen shillings and three-pence a minute.

Then there was that famous cause celebre of 1882, Belt v.
