

The Planet

DAILY AND WEEKLY
Chatham, Ont.THIS JOURNAL GAVE NO PROMISE AND BROKE NO PLEDGE.

As the twig is bent so the tree grows. It seems impossible for the Banner-News to avoid the childish outbreaks which periodically grace—or would you say disgrace—the career of the Banner-News has made, the Planet has to apologize to its readers for the unprofessional course that paper has taken and which this journal is compelled to follow in order to protect itself. An internal grievance of one newspaper against another cannot possibly interest the public. It is a matter to be settled between themselves and not to be aired before readers, who can only be bored by it. A public journal is for public affairs, not for private differences in the management of offices. With this explanation for a departure from the strict ethics of professional journalism The Planet will reply to the Banner-News' charge.

That paper says: "The Banner-News yesterday received from Principal Brackin a list of the McKeough school students promoted, as a result of the Christmas examinations. It came into the office with a request that it be published on Friday."

The B-N. then states that it asked Mr. Brackin if he had made the same request to The Planet and that he replied affirmatively. That, we believe, is a correct statement of the case so far as laid down by the Banner-News. Now comes a funny omission in the article. The B-N. set out to charge The Planet with publishing this list in bad faith, and on that assumption to abuse it. But it forgot all about the charge in the article. It omitted to mention that this great family journal did publish the list, and like almost all the other local news in town, it published it 21 hours ahead of its estimated local contemporaries. Having furnished the text which the Banner-News set out to harp upon and then forgot we will proceed.

Because The Planet published this list in the ordinary way the Banner-News says: "The Planet is either enterprising, or guilty of a dishonorable action." The Planet is quite willing to plead guilty to being enterprising, but if the Banner-News had used half the precautions any newspaper ought to use it would never have had any occasion to question The Planet's honor. When The Planet gives its word it keeps it. In this case it did not promise anybody not to publish the list. It was not asked to do so. Further than that it was not trying to get ahead of the Banner-News by a trick—it does that every day in dozens of items without the necessity of resorting to trickery.

If the Banner-News wanted to know whether The Planet was going to publish the McKeough school list or not that day it need not have gone to a lot of trouble appealing to Mr. Brackin. It could in something less than a minute have sent a boy across the road and asked at this office. The B-N. would have been told that this leading advertising medium, in spite of its columns being crowded with Christmas ads, proposed to publish the article, that Mr. Brackin's note though suggestive of Friday was not mandatory, and that The Planet intended to issue the news to its readers at the earliest possible moment, as usual.

At the same time this great family journal would have been courteous in the matter and even forbearing. If the B-N. had explained that while the Planet could rattle the matter up on its type-setting machines it, the B-N., could not handle it at that hour the Planet would have been agreeable enough to back it over and let some merchant have the coveted space for his Christmas advertising. But the B-N. did not seem that way over. It got crossed because it could not help it. It set lists like this, which come in late, a newspaper has to have the facilities. That accounts for many articles which appear in The Planet and which our local contemporaries have the privilege of reproducing in an amended form next day from these columns.

The Planet is equipped with the Rogers' typograph, while the B-N. sets its type by hand. On the typograph a long article can be set in a very few minutes. It is not difficult for this journal to get up matter, to the last minute, the trouble is to find space for it without crowding out advertisers who have already contracted for space.

Now, we cannot regard this action of the B-N. but as a most unbecoming for which The Planet broke faith with nobody, for it had made no promise nor had it been asked to make one. But, unfortunately again, the Banner-News proceeds to vilify the suspect without getting his side of the case? Would it think of going out and

Be it spring, summer, autumn or winter, someone in the family is "under the weather" from trouble originating in impure blood or low condition of the system.

All these, of whatever name, can be cured by the great blood purifier, Hood's Sarsaparilla. It never disappoints.

writing up a derogatory report about some well-known citizen without, at least asking him for his side of the story? But that's what it did in this case.

However, after all, this great family journal cannot find it in its warm heart to be angry with the Banner-News. It is a nice little paper, but as the Market Guide, and the two we must leave to fight it out for second place. As a newspaper it cannot hope to compete with The Planet. For instance, after making all this fuss about the McKeough school list it could not even handle the promotions in the Central school yesterday, though they came in earlier still. They appeared in The Planet. They will appear in the Banner-News, probably to-day, or at least not later than Monday. Now, if the B-N. was so hurt over its misunderstanding with Principal Brackin about the McKeough list, why did it not make an effort to keep up with The Planet on the Central School list? Simply because it was mechanically impossible. That is the simple truth, and the simple truth also of many other items which constantly appear. What then is the use of making foundationless charges—at least this one would have been made if the B-N. had not forgotten to put it in—to excuse these scoops when they cannot be helped from mechanical reasons?

Having gone into this matter at some length, all we wish to add is that if the B-N. goes about it the right way and inquires, it will find The Planet's promise, when given, is as good as any man's bond, and this paper would further suggest that in future if it imagines it has a grievance of an office character, in which the public is not interested, it is simpler to have explanations over the telephone than to worry readers through the news columns.

QUITTING TOO SOON.

Ottawa Evening Journal.

"Some eight hundred Canadians, Mounted Rifles and Artillery, are started home from Cape Town. They are the very sort of troops most needed in South Africa—yet here they come, while Boers are still capturing British regiments. After all, sending Canadian troops on this basis of a year's engagement is a little of a toy business. Next time the enlistment ought to be for the term of the war, or else stay home. 'Grip is a good dog, but hold fast is a better.'"

BABY FOODS.

It is clear that doctors and mothers think more of special foods than they used to.

The reasons are: (1) both mothers and babies live less naturally than they used to;

(2) mother's milk is not so plenty, and not so good, as it used to be; (3) Scott's emulsion of cod-liver oil is mother food as well as baby food —enables the mother to feed her baby naturally.

We'll send you a little to try if you like.

ON THE FIELD
OF WATERLOO.The Most Momentous Battle in the World's HistoryVividly Portrayed by Mr. McKeough—
His Visit to the Scene of Napoleon's
OverthrowHotel Belle Vue,
Brussels,
Sept. 19, 1900.

After securing our rooms in this pleasant hotel, which is the same house that Charles O'Malley rode up to after the battle of Waterloo, and where he met his sweetheart, Lucy Dashwood, and partaking of a palatable luncheon in a pretty garden, eating out of doors is the favorite method on the continent—we proceeded with our program arranged before leaving home, which we have strictly adhered to, and which this afternoon comprised a visit to the field of Waterloo.

There are several ways to proceed from Brussels to the scene of the combat. A coach leaves the principal hotels every morning about nine o'clock, returning in time for dinner, occupying the whole day, fare, $1.50. A one horse carriage can be obtained for $1 or a two horse one for $6; also taking up the entire day but making a delightful outing—or one can take a train for Braine l'Alleud, 13 miles, and from there by omnibus 11-2 miles to the Hotel du Musee, at the foot of the "Lion Hill," about the centre of the battle field, and then leisurely stroll about the various spots of interest. By this route you can do the field nicely in half a day. Fare $1 for the round trip. After taking a cab, and finding our train did not leave for half an hour, we directed our cabman to proceed to No. 7, Rue des Cendres, where the memorable ball was given by the Duchess of Richmond on that portentous night of the 15th of June, 1815.

"There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gathered then,
Her beauty and her chivalry."

Many English ladies accompanied the Duchess as far as Brussels, including the Duchess of Richmond, both her husband and son being officers. When the excitement, which was patronized by the most distinguished officers of the allied troops, was at its height, a note was brought to the Duke of Wellington, who, having read it, continued his conversation with the lady who was with him, as if the note was of no importance. Excusing himself shortly afterwards, he went to the balcony, and leaning over the railing, informed them that Napoleon was in the vicinity, and that he proposed to meet him, and one by one the officers who were at the ball stole away. During the remainder of that night there were heard in the streets of Brussels "the measured tramp of soldiers, the clatter of horse hoofs and the ceaseless roll of artillery."

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

Leaving the plain, substantial white stone house which is now a convent for the Station du Midi, we passed swiftly through a pleasant and fertile country, reaching Braine l'Alleud, where we were again in an Anglo-Saxon atmosphere, the French language was no longer heard, and the family of the Duke of Wellington, who were in the vicinity, and that he proposed to meet him, and one by one the officers who were at the ball stole away. During the remainder of that night there were heard in the streets of Brussels "the measured tramp of soldiers, the clatter of horse hoofs and the ceaseless roll of artillery."

It was easily seen, was admirably situated for defensive warfare. A portion of the army was drawn up on a ridge running east and west, the remainder were kept behind the crest of the ridge and therefore unseen by the enemy. This ridge has been largely removed to make the Lion Mound, which was used by Wellington to mark the position of the army.

On returning to the scene of the victory, several years after the event, "that they had spent his battle field, the Duke of Wellington, who was in the vicinity, and that he proposed to meet him, and one by one the officers who were at the ball stole away. During the remainder of that night there were heard in the streets of Brussels "the measured tramp of soldiers, the clatter of horse hoofs and the ceaseless roll of artillery."

Wellington had, roughly speaking, 67,000 men, and Napoleon 72,000. It was during this encounter that Victor Hugo in the greatest of all his novels, "Les Misérables," so vividly describes the awful charge when the French dashed over into an unexpected ravine, one on top of the other, in their mad onset and confusion until the abyss was filled, and the last troops galloped across the bodies of their living and dying companions. Here also came the final and desperate effort of Napoleon. Wellington had been informed of the coming attack by a deserter, was prepared for it, and ordered the advance of his whole line to meet it. It was then that he used the famous phrase, "Up, Guards, and at them!" Then ensued one of the most terrible charges in the history of warfare. The two armies were muzzle to muzzle, their lines nearly touched on another, the French could not withstand the terrific assault of the British, the old guard victors of a hundred fights wavered, swayed to and fro, confusion and panic succeeded and they fell back overwhelmed and beaten. Napoleon, seeing it, exclaimed, "All is lost. Let them save themselves who can!" and galloped off the field, and thus ended this sanguinary and decisive battle, which also culminated the ambitious and glorious career of the "Cyranean poet."
