WEDDING BELLS

An interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Graham, Main River, N. B., on January 1st, when their only daughter, Miss Annie M., was united in marriage to Mr. William H. Rogers of Coal Branch. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Alexander Craile of Base River, in the presence of the near relatives of the contracting parties. The bride, who was unattended, was given away by her father; and was dressed in champagne colored silk, and carried a bouquet of cream roses and maiden-hair fern. Leoborgin's wedding march was played by Miss Margaret Clarke, cousin of the bride. The parlor was tastefully decorated with evergreens and potted plants. After partaking of a dainty supper the happy couple left on the morning for a short trip to Toronto and other Canadian cities. The bride's traveling suit was of best root broad cloth, with taupe hat and fox fur, the latter being the gift of the groom. Many beautiful gifts were received, showing the esteem in which the young couple are held. On their return they will reside in Campbellton, where Mr. Rogers is employed in C. G. R. service.

The New Buie School House

Has Two Departments Up-to-Date in all Respects—A Credit to the Town—Built by T. Power

The new Buie school house, at Bridgeport, Newcastle, was opened on Monday and to a credit to the town and its builders. It is a one story, two room building, 30x60 feet with a 13 foot ceiling. One room has two closets for clothes, and the other has one. Each room has hardwood floors, is thoroughly painted and furnished and will seat about 50 pupils. A partition, with sliding doors divides the rooms. There are front and back porches each 6x15 feet, in each of which opens a door from each room. The ceiling and roof are of steel. There is a concrete basement with concrete floor, the whole size of the building and a wood furnace. The windows of the building are all double hung.

The concrete work was done by James T. Forrest, the painting by James McCormack, and the installation of the heating apparatus by B. P. Malley. The building which cost about $6000, was designed, constructed and supervised by the well known and highly efficient contractor Thomas Power of Newcastle, who has so many fine buildings to his credit.

Only one room is occupied this term, with Miss Ella Gray as teacher. Next term there will be two teachers, and Bridgeport's long agitation for better educational facilities will have been satisfied.

The school grounds now measure a full acre and provision has been made for a school garden under Miss Gray's direction.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine. Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Keweenaw's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

JANUARY ROD AND GUN

Among the magazines on the newsstands during the holiday season the January number of Rod and Gun, with its list of contents depicting outdoor life, makes a special appeal to the sportsman, whose activities at this season are limited in the field of sport, and who is therefore dependent upon written experiences for his enjoyment. Among the contributors to this number are Donavante Dale, H. C. Hadlow, M. A. Shaw, Edward T. Martin, George R. Belton, Robert Page Lim and many others. The usual departments are well maintained. Under The Trip department appears a write-up of the Grand International Tournament at St. Thomas, recently, while The Kennel section contains an illustrated record of the recent Canadian National Field Trials held at Ojibway.

Unique Find In Ontario

The locked antlers.

IN September and October during the rutting season, the hunter occasionally hears the sounds of a terrific combat between those giants of the forest, the bull moose. With their formidable antlers these huge creatures can snap a young birch tree like a piece of matchwood, and although it is only rarely that the bull moose will attack a man, if he does so the man has little chance unless he is quick with his high powered rifle. The other day on St. Ignace Island, twenty-one miles south of Rossport, on the C. P. R., a pair of locked moose horns was found as the tragic record of a combat. They had evidently been fighting when the antlers became entangled and, unable to extricate each other the two animals died there of starvation, their

INDIAN TOTEM POLES

- (1) Kik-Setti Totem, Wrangell, Alaska.
- (2) Totem, Wrangell, Alaska.
- (3) Bear Totem, Klug-wan, Alaska.

THE clan totem of the Indian is one of the most interesting productions of the red man. These strange specimens of wood sculpture are still to be found in British Columbia, especially along the Pacific Coast, as well as in Alaska. In many a waterside village these curiously crested poles stand in prominent places, or along the main street, as in Alert Bay, or over the graves of brave warriors who have gone to their happy hunting grounds. To the white man they are as mysterious as the druidical stones, but to the Indian they tell the clan to which the dead Indian belonged, as well as his tribal status.

Each clan of the Indians of Alaska and British Columbia has its own totem, from which it takes its name. Thus there is the clan of the wolf, the clan of the raven, the clan of the frog, and so on. All the members of the clan are supposed to be descended, actually and literally, from the animals whose names they bear, and to conduct themselves always with due remembrance of the fact. For example, a man isn't supposed to kill or eat his father, and, therefore, the Indians of the bear clan, for instance, are not supposed to eat or kill bear. That animal is sacred to them, and the medicine man or "shaman" of the clan will invoke the dire penalties on any member who dares to transgress that rule.

The marriage customs of the clan are regulated by their totem. It is absolutely unthinkable that two members of the same clan should ever marry. With them a bear must mate with a raven, or a fox or a beaver or a shark or a member of some other clan, and never with a bear. Usually these poles are very large and have a doorway cut through them at the level of the ground, through which women are led to the solidly built wooden house in which the clan or clan lives. Among some of the Pacific Coast tribes, even within the memory of men, not uncommonly the poles of the chief's house were set in holes in which were placed bottles, through the supernatural belief that this would drive away evil spirits, protect the chief, and conduce to success in fishing, hunting and victory in war. When the poles were placed in position and the house finished, the ceremony was generally ended by a feast. For selection the slaves were gathered into the new house, which was always the largest in the village. The chief with his principal "wives" entered, dressed as demons in bear and wolf skins, and decorated with horns, bones, skulls, eagles' claws, and panthers' teeth. A bandage was then placed over the chief's eyes, and thus blindfolded, to the sport of his "wives," he chased the terrified creatures through the house until he had caught the number agreed upon to be made sport of.

The accompanying illustrations are striking specimens to be found in Alaska, and while the art is crude, yet they are not to be despised as a revelation of the artistic spirit of these original Americans.
