DEATH OF THE DUKE OF CLARENCE

The news of the death of Prince Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, eldest son o the Prince of Wales and next to him in cost what it did under the old system. Th the line of succession to the English expenditures upon the roads and streets throne, has cast a gloom not only over the bught to be kept within the appropriation and could be with proper management, British empire but over the entire civi lized world, and from all quarters of the but when the roadmaster is selected, no globe have come messages of heartfel sympathy for the bereaved royal family It appears from what is known of the young Prince that he was retiring in his disposition and studious in his habits He seems to have endeavored by domesti study, as well as foreign travel, to fit him self for the high and distinguished position which he might one day be called upon to fill and gave promise that he would have filled that position with credi to himself and benefit to his people, and it is no doubt on this account that his loss is so generally mourned by the English people. Sad as it is for his parents to lose a beloved son, doubly sad it is for the Princess May whose prospects in life have been so suddenly blighted and over whose afterlife this event must cast a perpetual gloom

THE SITUATION.

The leading political events of the weel past have been the partial reconstruction of the dominion government and the Richelieu election. Both have been very great disappointment to conserva tives, and as to both it may be said the disappointment is not without good reason. The first step towards the lon promised reconstruction will strike th country as not only inadequate but inde fensible. Either Mr. Abbott consider any kind of material good enough for cabinet timber or his party is sadly defficient in the right kind of stuff. Mr. Haggart's lapses from morality are notoriou and if he were known to be well qualifie in other respects for this important office. which he is not, it would be an offence to decency to keep him in the cabinet under all the circumstances, but to promote him
