S. Fielding, Premier of Nova hard-pan and see what objection there is goods of various kinds, clothing, gloves, umbrellas, etc., and the average duty on the whole lot, which was formerly 17k claim freedom of thought, not of course per cent, was just 33 per cent. But in that list of goods there were articles that enter into the consumption of the laboring man. An ordinary piece of woolen material that would go to make a working man's overcoat, was taxed all the way from 30 to 70 per cent, and yet Sir John Thompson has told the people that the taxation is levied on luxuries. If time permitted, I would like to go into this subject further. One point, though, I would like you to remember: That the consumer not only pays the difference between the old rate and the new rate, but he has to pay a profit on the increased duty which the importer has to pay, so that while under the old tariff of Mackenzie, $100 worth of British goods of the average class cost when they got into the hands of the consumer, through the importer and retailer $180, they would now cost $220. That can be demonstrated by actual calculation. Sometimes it is said that we did not import these goods now but make them here. To that I reply, that the calculations I give you were taken from an actual importation. Then, our opponents have the habit of selecting a single article and saying that it can be bought as cheaply, or more cheaply than before. That is an argument to be used to an ignorant man only. It leaves out of consideration the wonderful improvements in machinery and in all the industrial arts whereby the cost of production in almost every line of manuimprovement, you should get the benefit of every dollar that is gained to mankind by the advancement of human ingenuity.
