for the White House occupation. Last week Vermont rolled up a large Republican majority, as was to be expected in the Green Mountain State, but this was offset by a solid Democratic majority in the State of Arkansas. On Monday the State elections came off in Maine, and the Fusionist candidate was successful by over 1,000 majority. This is in reality a Democratic victory, and the Republicans feel depressed over the news, while the Democrats are correspondingly elated. Of course subsequent elections may go as hard against the Democrats as the Maine one has gone against their opponents, but it must be admitted on all sides that Hancock stock has taken an apward bound from the result of the election in Maine.
