Body Cast Into Lake Michigan

Drafts Back to Slaver's Cabin—Accusing Star of Lifeless Man Drives Murderer to Sheriff and He Tells About the Crime that He Committed.

Escanaba, Mich., Dec. 2.—Additional details of the circumstances in which Arthur Lindquist, arraigned himself as a murderer have been told by the prisoner.

About one month ago a man named Fogarty was missed by his friends and associates. As the days lengthened into weeks and still no news came of him the impression of foul play grew stronger. But who had killed him was a mystery. Two arrests were made, but the evidence was lamentably weak.

Last Friday Lindquist, a fisherman, rowed to Escanaba, across the bay from his hut, and surrendered to the Sheriff. He told him that he and the man found dead had a row, that he had struck Fogarty on the head with a brick and then rolled the body into the water.

He went down to the beach, he said, Friday morning to attend to some odd jobs. Arrived there he was horrified to see the body of the man he had killed near a month before, at a distance of five miles from the spot, lying in the sand. The eyes were wide open and accusing. To the terror-stricken man they seemed to be gazing toward his cabin.

The storm had driven the body ashore at this point. Out of all the points along the borders of Lake Michigan, this place—the spot in front of the cabin—was the one toward which the restless waters had chosen to carry their burden. The unreasoning sea cast its mute evidence and its awful accusation at the feet of the man-guilty of the crime.

Lindquist had tried to dispose of the body, but his nerves were unequal to the task. He could not rid himself of the horrible impression caused by the unexpected spectacle of his victim lying on the sand at his feet. No doubt in those awful moments he felt that concealment was impossible—that the earth would somehow give up his secret even as the waters had done. And the eyes followed him everywhere—the wide, far-seeing, terrible eyes of the slain man.

He shut himself up in his cabin to devise some new plans of escape. But it was useless. His fate had cried out from the mute lips of his victim. The only escape he could imagine lay in confession. By that course he would at least rid himself of the burden of his terrible secret, even though the guilt of his crime remained. So he closed his cabin, found the Sheriff—and the mystery was solved.

The Death of Hon. D. J. Greene, K.C.

It will come as a shock to the community to learn that Mr. D. J. Greene, K.C., passed quietly away at 2 o'clock. We received the news just as we go to press. It would appear that the deceased gentleman had suffered at times during the past twelve months from trouble in the alimentary canal from which he has quickly recovered. Last night he was subject to another attack, which was complicated by a falling of the action of the heart. During the night and also this morning pulsation was very low, and in spite of the administration of strong restoratives, the attendant physicians felt that his recovery was hopeless, and as we have stated already he passed away at two o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Greene occupied a most prominent position in public and professional circles and was highly esteemed for his good heart, kindly wit, and high sense of honour. For very many years he represented Ferryland in the House of Assembly, and at the time of the change of Government after the Bank Crash he became Prime Minister. After his resignation to allow the late Sir W. V. Whiteway to re-assume office, he became a member of the Legislative Council. At the Bar he occupied a leading position. After the death of Sir J. S. Winter and Mr. A. J. W. McNeilly, his only seniors but a few months ago, he became the senior member of the Law Society and was elected President. As Colonel of the Catholic Cadet Corps he was well known also among the younger members of his Church, and much esteemed. To his wife, and his brother and other relatives we extend our sympathy in this hour of sorrow.

Increases in Pay.

We learn that the Government has increased the salaries of Mr. J. T. Meeney, Mr. Rooney, Mr. Kinsella and Mr. Lloyd, who are engaged either in the Postal or Telegraph work. Why some civil servants are favoured and others cannot get a show is a matter of much comment in the service and amongst the public. There is in this connection the case of Mr. Clarke, for whom it is said that the Postmaster General has frequently made recommendations as to his deserts, but which, we are told, have so far fallen on deaf ears.

It would be interesting to know on what principles a few civil servants are selected for increases in salary or for favours, or whether there is any principle followed in such a selection. Is the selection haphazard, or is it made on merit alone, or is it influenced by political or other pull?

Supreme Court.

(Before Chief Justice.)

About 2 o'clock this morning the special jury in the suit of Nicholas Philpot vs. The Bonavista Bay Mutual Insurance Co. returned a verdict of $800 for the plaintiff. Mr. Warren, K.C., for plaintiff; Mr. Foote for defendant.

This morning the hearing of R. Stockwood's claim against Dr. Doyle for land at Gull Island was begun. It will be resumed to-morrow. Mr. Morison, K.C., for plaintiff; Mr. Gibbs, K.C., for defendant.

Fishery News.

Lark Harbor—Boats still doing well.

King's Point—Doing well with herring. Several codfish caught yesterday through the ice.

The west bound express arrived at Port aux Basques on time last night. The east bound express reached town at 2:30 p.m. yesterday.

THE BRAZIL MARKET.—The Minister of Marine and Fisheries had the following message from Bahia:—“Forty-two milraes; market slack.”

Schooner Dashed to Pieces.

Family Has Narrow Escape.

When the big storm of a couple of weeks ago was on, a schooner owned by Mr. Samuel Collins of Hare Bay, B.B., was dashed to pieces on the rocks in Trinity Bay at a place called Old Woman's Cove, and a family on board as well as the crew narrowly escaped being drowned. Collins lent the schooner to the father of the family to take his wife and children from New Hr. to Hare Bay and on the run they were overtaken by the storm and put into Old Woman's Cove. Here at night the vessel dragged her anchors and was swept ashore. A sea carried the boat away and death for all seemed inevitable, when one of the crew waded ashore through the surf and reached the rocks in a condition of utter exhaustion, taking a stout rope with him from the vessel. He braced himself for the emergency, knowing that the lives of a woman and several children depended on his exertions. He made fast the shore end of the line to a jagged spur of rock and a cackle was made with a running noose over the line and in this the man essayed to take his wife and children ashore. It was a terrible task in the darkness and storm, but he succeeded with the aid of the other men on board, landed all successfully, but not without mishap. One of the children, a little girl, was swept by the sea from her father's arms and was given up for lost, as she was gone for 1½ hours when she was found on the beach having been washed ashore by the waves. She was unconscious and was revived after the men worked over her for about one hour. Another of the children, a boy, was swept against a rock after being washed overboard, and he too was found thrown up by the water and was so badly wounded about the head that he was unconscious for four hours. He, however, has since fully recovered. The whole party narrowly escaped drowning and lost all their belongings. They were minus their boots, and landed just as they were and when they left the vessel's cabin. The vessel, we learn, was not insured and the loss to Collins is a severe one.
