ST. JOHN'S.President Wilson Addresses American Federation of Labour.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Nov. 12.

President Wilson, in a forceful address here to-day before the American Federation of Labor, appealing to the workmen of the United States for co-operation in the conduct of the war, made it emphatically clear that he opposes peace until the war against Germany has been won. The President declared his heart was with the "feeling of the pacifist," but that "my mind had a contempt for them. I want peace but I know how to get it and they don't," he declared. Colonel House, head of the American Delegation to the Allies War Conference, the President said, he had sent to take part in the Conference as to how the war was to be won, and he knows and I know that is the way to get peace if you want it for more than a few minutes. The 450 delegates to the conference and several thousand people who were admitted to the hall to hear the President speak, rose and applauded this declaration with a tremendous burst of cheers. Another demonstration of approval came when he said, "We must stand together night and day until this job is finished." The President, while developing his address to problems for the people of the United States, laid emphasis upon the broader phases of the world conflict in a way that seemed to indicate that his speech was possibly intended as a message to the people of Germany, Austria and Russia, as well as of the United States. He declared his belief that were it not for the pan-Germans, the spirit of freedom would find as fine a welcome in the hearts of the Germans as it can in any other heart. "Power," he said, "can't be used with concentrated force against free peoples if it is to be used by free people." Speaking probably of Austria, President Wilson referred to the intimations of anxiety for peace that had come "from one of the Central Powers," and said it meant "that the people in that central power know if the war ends as it stands they will in effect themselves be vassals of Germany, notwithstanding that they do not wish in their pride and proper spirit of nationality to be absorbed and dominated." Of Russia, he said he was amazed that some groups in that country could suppose that "any reform plans in the interest of the people can live in the presence of Germany, which is powerful enough to overthrow them by a stroke of force." Fatuous as the dreamers of Russia were those persons in this country, he declared emphatically, "who supposed that the free industry and enterprise of the world can continue if the pan-German plan is achieved and German power fastened upon the world." The President directly asserted that Germany started the war, and said he would leave confirmation of this statement to the verdict of history. He referred to Germany's growth to a place in the sun and asked why she was not satisfied when she gained that position. In answer, he described the German Government's methods of controlling competition of its industries, and asserted that all the while there was lying behind its thought its dream for future political control, which would enable it in the long run to dominate labor and industry of the world. Wilson cited in this connection the Berlin to Bagdad railway, which he said was constructed to run a threat of force down the flank of industrial undertakings of half a dozen other countries, so that when German competition came in, it would not be resisted too far, because there was always the possibility of getting German armies in the heart of that country quicker than any other armies could get there. Summing it up he said that Germany is determined that political power of the world shall belong to her, but that never before had such ambitions been based upon so exact and precise and scientific a plan of domination. The President voiced in terms of eulogy his approval of the conduct of Samuel Gompers, President of American Federation of Labor, and the spirit of co-operation he had manifested in his relations with the administration. I like to lay my mind, he said, alongside a mind that knows how to pull in harness. Horses that kick over traces will have to be put in corral. The President's references to Gompers were loudly applauded. While we are fighting for freedom, the President asserted after these references, we must see among other things that labor is free. We must see to it that the instrumentalities by which conditions of labor are improved are not blocked and checked. Nobody has a right to stop the process of labor until all methods of conciliation and settlement have been exhausted. The President took occasion to denounce the mob spirit which he said is displaying itself here and there in this country. He declared that if our men have not self-control they are not capable of that great thing which we call a democratic government. A pledge of loyalty to the government was contained in the annual report of the executive council which was submitted to the Convention to-day. This report, according to the usual procedure, was referred to the committees named by Gompers, and its several sections will be taken up by the Convention as soon as it is reported back, to take in the summary of the report sent by mail. At the afternoon session Secretary Morris read a telegram from Frank J. Hayes, denying the report that Hayes or the mine workers intend to lead a fight against President Gompers and those who are leading this fight until militarism is wiped from the face of the earth. President Hayes' telegram was received by Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York, who also addressed the Convention. He declared that the fight that democracy may live, is the fight of labor, for labor and democracy are one. They can't survive one without the other. The American workmen, he said, are fighting for the workmen of the world, for it is not on the battlefields alone that this war is being fought, it is not only what the workmen do, it is his attitude of mind and his faith that constitutes an important part in his world's struggle.

Newfoundland Scotch Cured Herring.

Various reports of contracts and prices are seeping their way into the New York market from Newfoundland, but there is little concerning the fall fishery that has come to operators here. It is known, however, that contracts have been made for large quantities of Newfoundland herring this year by New York concerns, and it is known that prices have been $13.50 and up to $15 for the goods. There is a general discussion among this branch of the trade as to the future market for this salt, herring commodity, but no predictions of what the opening prices will be have come from the merchants here. It is fair to assume, however, that the first lots in this market will command a high price, probably from $22 to $25 per barrel, according to the quality of the fish and the condition of the market at the time of arrival. If the jobbing trade is well supplied at the time (and this seems unlikely in view of the continued consumption demand) the prices will be lower; if there is a shortage it may be expected that prices will be high. Trading has been more or less slack during the past week, but there is a demand in evidence in many quarters. Some operators report that they are now practically cleaned up on their stocks of last fall's herring, but there is a fair quantity still in second hands in and about New York. Quotations have shown little change since last report: large falls bringing from $22 to $24 per barrel and other sizes in proportion.—N. Y. Fishing Gazette, Nov. 3.
