Why Blame the Rat? Gosse of Spaniard's Bay "Some days ago, in Paris, 'a rat. gnawed through a lead pipe, the gas escaped, somebody lit a match in the cellar where the leak was, a tremedous explosion followed, and twentythree persons were injured in the restaurant above," writes Frank Crane in Current Literature. "Everybody blamed the rat. "The art of blaming seems to be the most clumsily and amateurishly prac-tised of all the arts.

"In fact, blaming is usually an expression of our prejudice, our desires or our passions, rarely of our judg-
