STORY THAT A DISCUSSION ON RELIGION BROUGHT OUT.

It Involved a Christian and an Infidel and a Most Remarkable Coincidence, and the Narrative Pointed a Moral as Well.

The question of religion came up the other day in the Busy Men's Lunch glub, and old Parmesan, who is senior warden of St. Pecunia's church and therefore constitutes himself a de-fender of the faith, remarked, "You may say what you like, gentlemen, but a religious man is more apt to help se who need it than an infidel.

"I am a firm believer in Christianity," remarked Bilson, who has made a million or so in the Swamp during the last few years, "but I take exception to that statement. When it comes to helping a fellow who is down, it's about an even toss between a Chris-tian and an infidel. You doubt it?" he continued as he saw old Parmesan shake his head. "Well, to prove what I say I will give you an episode in my own life. I came to New York in 1873 with no capital but a country made suit of clothes and a common school education. I was a lank looking young fellow, with 'hayseed' written all over me; but, like many another raw coun-try lad, I was irresistibly attracted to the city, where I soon expected to strike the combination that would lead to fortune and fame. But before long my main thought was to keep from starving. 1 could get no work, and nobody would listen to me when I asked for it. I tried to keep up my courage. but in my heart I would have given anything to be back on the old farm again. Well, one day I grew especially desperate. The papers were full of the triumphant success of 'Billy, the Con-verted Bum,' who was holding revivals all over the country. And I asked my-self why I, a clean, decent young fellow, who had never been a 'bum' should be allowed to starte, while 'Billy' was living on the tat of the land. At first the wild thought came into my head to start out myself on a career of cr-I mean of revivalism uncareer of cr-1 mean of revivalism un-der the name of 'Charley, the Con-verted Boy Fiend,' and rake in the shekels like 'Billy.' But somehow I felt I couldn't get down as low as that.

A brilliant thought struck me, how-ever. I would state the whole thing in an advertisement, more to relieve my feelings than with any hope of getting an answer. "So I scraped enough money together to insert the following in one of the papers: 'If I were a drunken "bum" just taken out of the gutter, scores of kind religious people would stretch out a hand to help me. But as I am only a decent and self respecting young man, with no vices or bad habits. I am without work and starving in great, cruel city.' And I added my initials and address. "The next day I called to see if there might possibly be an answer and got two. The first one I opened read as follows: 'I was touched by your strange advertisement, as I myself was once in the same position. I found help through a noble Christian man, and if you will call and see me I will prove to you that there is a Christian who is able and willing to help you if you are worthy. Ask to see me personally, as I am sorry to say my partner is an infidel, and, though a good man, he might not be disposed to look at your case so kindly.'

soon opened it and read as follows: 'I was deeply stirred by the undertone of despair in your advertisement, as I was once as friendless as you are. I found a start in life through a noble man who, like myself, was an unbeliever. And if you will call and see me I will prove to you that there is an unbeliever who is both able and will-

was interesting and remarkable too. After trying in vain to decide to which of these two gentlemen I should make myself known I determined to see them together and read the two letters to them. I did so, and you ought to have seen the look of blank surprise that came over the faces of both men as they learned that, though differing so widely in creed, they were at one in acknowledging the religion of humani-ty. They were silent for a few moments, and then the Christian, with tears in his eyes, grasped the hand of his partner and said:

"'Brother, I have wronged you, for I have learned that, without knowing it, you are not far from the kingdom of heaven.' "'It is I who have wronged you,' ex-
