My dear Mr. Principal:

It seems only right to tell you without delay that I am seriously considering the possibility of applying for the post of Director of Legal Studies to the Law Society in London. Since the appointment is undoubtedly an attractive one there would certainly be strong competition, and therefore it is quite probable that candidates better qualified than myself would come forward.

At the same time I feel that it is due to you to let you know at once what is in my mind, and I will inform you at once of any decision which I may make.

For many reasons I should be very reluctant to leave Canada for England. On the other hand the
