Scotia then supplied them with little or nothing; she can now supply them with nearly all they want. They do not take our beef and pork in peace, they are so dainty; and yet we talk of starving them! But if they could support a war of eight years, when Nova-Scotia was a young, uncultivated country, when our privateers swarmed in these seas, and the ocean was covered with the sleets of France, Spain, and Holland, how much easier will it be to sustain a war, when the provision vessels of England, can navigate in perfect safety, having no one to make them assaid? But do we not view the other side of the picture? Possessel as they will be of Buenos Ayres, where provisions are cheaper than in any part of the world, is there not danger, that a war with us may turn their attention to other channels of supply, and thus destroy, perhaps for ever this branch of our commerce?

It will be feen then, that the hope of coercing Great-Britain by commercial warfare, is as delufive and defperate, as by arms;—and after a long, but bloodlefs war, in which we fhould be called upon to fuffer rather than act, we should probably be obliged to abandon the claims for which the war was undertaken, unlefs Great-Britain, from causes totally out of our control, should be obliged to yield to the resistless power of France.

Let us now take a brief view of the effects of a British war, upon ourselves.—Those, who deluded by the language of the war newspapers, and especially Mr. Jessesson's, believe, that we are to enter into a war in which Great-Britain will be the only sufferer; and that we shall continue to prosper as before, will be woefully deceived. Not a man who has any thing to lose, not a labourer, who depends on the sweat of his brow, but will feel, and rue the effects of such a war:—they will be almost equally selt, and perceived in the compting-houses of the merchants; the parlones of the rich; and the cottage of the poor.

The farmer will furrender his cattle to the tax gatherer; the mechanick will be obliged to hang up his rufly tools; and the children of our industrious fishermen, will demand their bread in vain. This is not the picture of a fourth of July orator—it is fober reality. The National Intelligencer with the fang froid of a true philosopher, configns to beggary 250,000 merchants. He
