

after a number of tests, was finally exploded. Absolute quiet and abstention from every kind of business and excitement are an imperative necessity to give him the vigor he has heretofore displayed. People desirous of forming a Republic are victims of an illusion. From time to time within the last six years various persons of standing and influence have undertaken the thankless task of appealing to him. It has reached a point below the standard. The debate that followed eclipsed all other controversies. The proposition to increase their salaries came up. He is building up an enviable reputation. A simple overture (proposition) has been sent him. That is how he met the undercurrent of economical plaint flowing beneath their argument. The discussion wandered along in an idle desultory sort of style touching at a great many widely separated points en route. He left without achieving anything. He instanced the fact that, &c., by way of reply to his side shot. Don't relax your energetic endeavors until they have attained their meritorious object. Owing to a pressure on his time with business and other engagements the matter is left in abeyance (back ground). It strongly supports the theory of foul play. I have a vague idea that the various interests of the town centre in and around my own place. The sport belongs distinctly and particularly to us. It was an animated scene. The dresses of the ladies added a pleasing diversity to the scene—they exhaled gaiety in their piquant way. My reverie of the past was dissipated by the sweet music. This being done, they began one and all. The vicious deliberateness of his action impressed me not a little. It evoked considerable merriment. I took cognizance of this unexpected turn in affairs. It infused fresh vigor into me. I felt at this juncture a strong desire to see, in fact, longed for an accident. The details of the disaster prove that the train toppled into the water when the whole fabric collapsed. Some carriages were precipitated into the water, and reduced to a mass of wreckage. We venture to say that his new departure in substantially apologizing, exhibits a just deference to public opinion.
