That no national agreement club has the right to carry a non-playing manager on its reservation list was the decision of the National Baseball Commission in the case of Manager E. H. Ashenback of the Scranton ton team, in the New York State League, Ashenback called the matter to the attention of the commission, contending, further, that the Scranton Club had failed to give him notice regarding continuance of his contract as manager, and that they therefore, had no claim on him. The commission sustained the claim that, as a non-playing manager, he could not be placed on a reserve list, but declared that the other matter should be taken up with the National Association, which had jurisdiction.

News and Gossip of Baseball, Boxing, Turf-Freeman's Side Won.

Duck Walsh of the Chicago American Club, and Buck Freeman of the Boston team were opposing players in a game of baseball played in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on Monday for charity. There was a large attendance, as the proceeds went to the two local hospitals. In the first inning Walsh, who was pitching for the club trom his home town, Plains, was struck by a line ball, hit by Buck Freeman, and his index finger was so badly split that he had to retire from the game. This was a great disappointment to the crowd, who gathered especially to see him pitch. With Walsh out of the game, Freeman's side won by a score of 6 to 3.
