D. S. O., M. C. A famous aviator who had just returned to Canada after a visit to England, says that the British plans for building a fleet of six aeroplanes are inadequate and that 5,000 would be a more suitable number. It says that the wars of the future will largely be fought in the air, and that the great speed of the latest types of aeroplanes is such that no rangefinder could follow them and they would be immune from gunfire.
