

MANICURIST SUES FOR $100,000 IN HEART BALM

Says Millionaire Sportsman Promised to Marry Her— Gives an Interview.

New York, April 13—Tilted back in her chair in a front room of the brownstone boarding house at 138 East 44th street, Miss Harriet Hearn, aged twenty-eight, a manicure, told reporters why Oxo Cubes contain the rich nourishment of prime beef in so compact and convenient a form that they are handy or use anywhere, at any time. Just a cube—hot water—and a biscuit or two—and a light sustaining meal is ready.

she had brought suit for breach of promise against Hector Havenmeyer, grandson of William Frederick Havenmeyer and a millionaire sportsman, who lives with his wife, the former Miss Ray MacMaster Russell, at 372 Park avenue.

Black-eyed, brown-haired, with sharply cut features in contrast with a rather full figure, the manicure, who wants $100,000 for the failure of her desire to marry and enter society, made a striking picture.

The legal phases of the story are these: Through her attorneys the manicure filed suit against the millionaire in the supreme court, charging that Havenmeyer promised to marry her.

Had Suite at Hotel.

"Relying upon the truth of said promise and expecting and confiding that the defendant would perform said promise, the defendant secured a suite of rooms at a hotel where the defendant visited the plaintiff frequently, though the defendant well knew that it was impossible for him to perform the promise of marriage."

So reads the brief complaint. An answer was filed by Henry Uttal of 322 Broadway, counsel for Havenmeyer, denying the charges and stating that the manicure is the wife of Garry Hearn. A counter affidavit, filed late yesterday afternoon by the manicure, denies the statement.

Mr. Uttal characterized the suit as a "joke," stating that the matter might have been settled out of court, but that his client now desired a trial to "prove the fitness of the story."

Her Signed Statement.

Miss Hearn's story is contained in a signed statement issued by her lawyer, Rosenthal and Halperin of 1476 Broadway, this story with her own philosophy in the interview. One statement in her story, not mentioned in her complaint, is that she charges Havenmeyer was introduced to her as "Hector Palmer."

She then was employed in the barber shop in the Grand Central Terminal. Last November, she states, Havenmeyer asked her to marry him. Here is her signed story:

"I had been working in the Grand Central Terminal since August. My that he could tell me anything and I would believe him."

"Now, Mr. Hector Havenmeyer not only refuses to see me but refuses to pay the balance of my hotel bill. The hotel people made me give up my rooms because the rent wasn't paid since that time. I have had nothing but trouble. Everything I own is being held at the hotel."

"Why do I sue for $100,000?" repeated the manicure, in answer to a question. "I believe that the men who can afford it should pay for giving women promises, and for leading them to believe they will have great futures."

"I know the world is full of men who go around telling girls that they can have anything they want, and then the girls are disappointed. Of course, if such a man can't pay for that, why all right. But if he can pay, I don't see why he shouldn't."

"Are you really in love with Mr. Havenmeyer?"

"Certainly," she replied. "I care for him a whole lot. He was very attractive to me. Why, he couldn't let a day go by without calling me up a dozen times and sending me boxes of candy and roses. And he always told me about our future."

"He told me he would let me meet all the society people when we went down south. He said he wanted me to be a lady, and he asked me to give up my position and leave all my clothes behind when I went to the hotel. He said he would buy me fur coats and silks and give me everything luxurious."

"Mr. Havenmeyer says you were married to Garry Hearn," said a reporter.

"I am not. I was never married," she replied emphatically. "I know Garry Hearn."

"Who is he?" she was asked.

"He's in business," she said. "He was never related to me."

"It is charged that you have received letters addressed to you as 'Mrs. Hearn,'" continued the reporter.

"I never receive any such letters," she exclaimed. "That's the other side trying to find something on me. I was never married. And I never received letters to Mrs. Hearn."

friend, Mr. Forster, made me acquainted with Mr. Palmer. Mr. Palmer said I was the one woman and only woman for him.

"He made me believe that he loved me, was going to take me south. Before leaving, he was to settle a certain sum of money in my name."

"I was to be introduced into society. I couldn't help but believe Mr. Palmer. He seemed thoughtful. He would send me roses and candy, he would call me

London, April 13—Bradford Socialists who largely dominate the local education committee, propose the purchase of a ship as part of the necessary equipment for the pupils of the new secondary school. A new building is required at a cost of about £100,000, and the Socialists contend it will be cheaper to buy a ship and have a floating school. A committee has been appointed to consider the proposal. It has not yet been decided whether the ship will be used entirely for educational purposes.

Supporters of the proposal point out that if the scholars were being taken to Rome, the hold could be used for taking Bradford goods and bringing Italian goods back. A trip for six or twelve months of a couple of hundred children to a foreign country where they could be landed would help them learn foreign languages. If international relations were improved by the Prince of Wales going abroad, it would be good for the democracy of the world to have visits from English children. A system of interchange of children might follow.
