So she solved her conscience.

His child! Godfrey Langley ground his teeth and drew a deep breath.

A young subaltern looked into the railay carriage in which he was seated; the boy's face was radiant, his eyes glowing.

aculate me, Langley!" he cried, "Marie has promised to be my wife!" Godfrey Langley raised his head, and a short discordant laugh burst from his lips.

The subaltern's face was grave as he tepped back on to the platform.

The Boer war was dying hard. Cape Colony was invaded, men looked at each other with disturbed, anxious faces, asking which had been considered out of range of all danger were even now being looted and burned; loyalists were being harried; rebels were going over to the inwader; feeruits were being called for from the country that the country the countr the counter and the plough. Every man who could carry arms was needed. Godfrey Langley was in the north of the colony, together with some half-dozen other officers ning the staff of Gen. B-, whose in structions were to keep Lord Kitchener informed of the movements of the invaders and drive them northward if possible. The headquarters of a first-class dining sa oon, traveled all night and during the day issued orders, elicited information and straightened matters generally in his district. It was no easy work he was called upon

An orderly stepped up to Godfrey Lang. ley before the subaltern's footsteps had died away in the distance Gen. B--- desired to speak to him at once.

He rose mechanically, crushing his letter in his fingers, as he walked through the compartments to the carriage where Gen. B---- sat amid his papers.

"Bad news from the old country, eh Langley?" queried the elder man, sympathetically, startled by the sight of the young Godfrey Langley drew himself together with a jerk; he forced a smile. "Oh, no, sir! What made you think so?" "Nothing. I'm glad I was mistaken. Here is a telegram from Col. Brown asking for immediate reinforcements at Heildorf.

It is worded simply and marked 'Urgent.' Tell me what you think about it." Godfrey Langley shook himself free of the stupor into which he had fallen. With a violent effort he forced his mind from Meg-pretty, blue-eyed, faithless Meg-and fixed it on his duty. There would be time enough to think of home by and by. Too much time, alas! Gen. B --- eyed the young man furtively while the latter perused the telegram. "Well," he said, impatiently, "what do you make of it all?" Godfrey Langley laid down the telegram slowly. It was a different man who looked up at length into the general's face to the one who had entered the carriage. "That telegram is dated the 6th inst., air," he said, curtly. "Col. Ayre reported on the 5th that he had passed through Heildorf. He made no mention of Col. Brown's force being there; indeed, if I recollect rightly, he said that he was to form a junction with Brown on the following day at Bad-

"Just so," said the general, leaning back in his seat. "Well, how do you account for this telegram then ?" "The Boers have tapped the wires," curt-ly responded the younger man. "It is an ambush." His eyes sparkled, his breath came fast. "Possibly," returned Gen. B ----, dryly.

But the chances are even. Brown and Ayre may have fallen back together to Heildorf and be hard pressed." There was a short silence before Langley

"If it is a trick, the Boers will be lying in wait for the reinforcements; they will also probably attack the garrison from which the reinforcements are drawn. It is obvious that reinforcements would be got from here." "Granted!" said the elder man. "If, on the other hand, the message is bona fide, a grave disaster will probably occur if help is not forthcoming. We are so lamentably short of men!" Again there was silence, broken as before by Langley. "Heildorf is only ten miles from here,

He had been so engrossed in his own thoughts that he had not noticed the miles flying under his horse's hoofs. A voice hailed him out of the darkness. Langler put spurs to his horse. Ten minutes later the walls of Heildorf were in Fredericton Herald Sees in Them a Compliment to Attorney General.

It is a compliment to Attorney General Pugsley that all the big and little dogs of the opposition are barking at his heels. It is a rule in the party of which Mr. Hazen is the local leader, that just as Hazen is the local leader, that just as soon as any gentleman obtains to popularity and prominence in the Liberal party, he is singled out for bitter attacks in the Tory press. Mr. Blair had that experience for years, but the unreasonable and malicious assaults on him served only to increase his power and popularity. Mr. Emmerson was also bitterly attacked, Mr. Tweedie has had his turn, and now Dr Pugsley is receiving an unusual share of

And yet there are few brighter, more patriotic New Brunswickers before the patriotic New Brunswickers before the public today in any capacity than Dr. Pugsley. What are the charges against him? That he has been over runnerated for public services rendered in his professional capacity. Dr. Pugsley is railed at because he received a reasonable fee for his labors in connexion with the oridge enquiry, but no mention is made in the opposition press of the large sum Dr. Stockton was paid in the same in-

New Brunswick has reason to feel of attorney general as Dr. Pugsley, a gentleman who stands in the very front gentleman who stands in the very front rank of the Canadian bar, with few equals and fewer superiors. He can well afford to let the little opposition yelpers continue to bark at his heels while he continues to give eminent service to his native province. The people are willing to pay Dr. Pugsley an adequate remuneration for the public duties he discharges, and there is not a tittle of evidence to show that he has been exhorbitantly rewarded. The public services for which he was paid during the past year were performed before he became a member of the government, which sought his assistance as the ablest member of the ber of the government, which sought his assistance as the ablest member of the New Brunswick bar, and remunerated him according to the merit of the services Colong, which he performed.

Clause to Add to Foreshore Bill to And Workmen in St. Petersburg-Protect Such.

On Saturday a delegation consisting of Aldermen Armstrong, Baxter, Macrae, Millidge, Hilyard, Recorder Skinner, Messrs. Henry Hilyard and F. E. Sayre its St. Petersburg correspondent:

Messrs. Henry Hilyard and F. E. Sayre interviewed the attorney general respecting the foreshore question.

Messrs. Hilyard and Sayre stated the fear which they and other owners had that the proposed legislation would interfere with the occupancy of their property at the head of the harbor, which they claim was granted by Governor Carleton to their predecessors.

claim was granted by Governor Carleton to their predecessors.

The attorney general said his attention had been directed to the question by the decision of the judicial committee of the privy council given not long since. Under this it was pretty well settled that the foreshores of public harbors were vested in the dominion, while all others were exited in the provinces. Regarding the ed in the dominion, while all others were vested in the provinces. Regarding the harbor of St. John it remained a question whether it was in dominion or provincial authority by reason of the doubt whether it is a public harbor under the meaning of the British North America act. While it had all the attributes of a public harbor, yet, by reason of its having been it had all the attributes of a public had bor, yet, by reason of its having been vested in the city of St. John and confirmed by act of the legislature, many eminent lawyers were of the opinion that it was, in one sense, a private harbor, though held by the city for public use. This, the attorney general pointed out, was what raised the doubt whether the property in the foreshores in the harbor is vested in the dominion or province. It had been thought by the common council desirable that all doubts should be removed, hence the intention for legislation.

As to that part of Courtenay bay which is As to that part of Courtenay bay which is east of the creek, the attorney general said he had no doubt that the foreshore there was vested in the province. So far as he was concerned, and he was sure the same could be said of the common council, there was no intention to interfere with private rights and, in order to make the matter absolutely clear, he suggested that a clause be added to the bill expressly saving such rights. Accordingly a clause was drawn up which seemed to meet the approval of all concerned. The clause is to the effect that nothing in the of any person or corporation on any por-tion of the foreshore.
