

the question

By Gary Blakeley

Would you be willing to pay up to $50 on top of your tuition to fund a new Student Centre?

Vera Dalloio, Arts II
"No. Fees are too high already, although the idea of creating a new building is a good one."

Djohan The, Science I
"No. We have enough facilities already."

Dave Kappel, Science II
"No. Charge user fees or membership fees for people who will actually use the facilities."

Jeff Smith, Education IV
"There are many pros and cons to this issue. However, what I would really like to know is what exactly is going inside this new building and what's in it for Glendon students who will also be paying?"

Ronni Kives, Fine Arts IV
"No. There are adequate facilities for my needs. Mind you, I don't know about other students. Also, this year most Arts and Fine Arts students carry newly implemented lab fees."

Sandra Schildroth, Arts III
"No. I don't have the money. Maybe if fees were lower I could afford it."

Richard Levin, Graduate Arts
"No. Economic conditions are not ideal at this time. These plans should be put off until government subsidization is available."

Mario Angas, Graduate Arts
"Yes. Although I would not personally benefit from the facilities. I am motivated by altruism—students need a place to call their own."

Luane Digiovani, Arts IV
"No. Tuition is already high enough. There are enough facilities."

Hasan Razvi, Science II
"No. Why should people be forced to pay for facilities they'll never use? Why should we pay for something we already have in the form of home colleges?"

Kelly Glynn, Fine Arts IV
"Yes, but why not five years earlier?"
