your chance will come."

It was on the road and only two so much after eating that my stomach was constantly in pain. I had palpitation and my heart would beat so violently that I thought I should drop and I was so bad I could hardly get round. I was persuaded to try Dodd's Dyspepsia. Tablets and after taking a few I felt better. I persevered with them and now I am pleased to say I am quite cured and Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets have done it."

It was on the road and only two weeks away. A millionaire had his summer home on the bank of the river runsing through the village. His eighteen-spear-old daughter was fond of rowing, there.

During the first year the old veterans crowded him around somewhat, but after that one of the cracker barrels was marked with his initials and duly like a Niagara. Abe was mild mannered a boat. The rich man's daughter was and easy going, and he was not much taking company out for a row. Two hundred feet above the dam, as she attempted to turn and go back, one of the oars snapped, and in her sudden panic she lost the other, while the boat turned broadside to the stream To go over the dam in that fashion meant death to all.

Abe Langford had been salvaging sawlogs and boards from the river with rope and hook and stood on the bank when the disaster to the boat occurred. There were others higher up and lower down who were startled by the screams of the girls, but not one of them grasped the situation. It was left for Abe. Off came his coat vest and shoes, and in he plunged. A score of men called to him that he could never hope to tow the boat ashore, but that wasn't his plan. There was just a chance that if the girls kept quiet and the boat was guided over the dam bow first she wowldn't fill or be upset. Abe caught it when it was yet fifty feet from the plunge, and, whirling it about, he hung on to the stern and got the bow pointed straight. Then he said to the girls:

"We have got to go over the dam. All of you crouch down and hang on for your lives. If you make one move we shall all be drowned."

There was screaming and yelling and shouting all along the banks, but Abe Langford was not rattled. Two of the girls had fainted away, and the other was dumb with fright. The boat half filled, but floated through to safety, and, guiding and swimming, Abe brought her to the bank. He had done a brave deed, and his fellow townsmen were unstinted in their praise. He took it all in his humble way, and as soon as he could escape them he went shivering home.

Dangers In Circulating Libraries. A foreign medical journal has been publishing facts about the dissemination of disease through books from public libraries. It is, of course, impossible for librarians to ascertain where books have been or to know the conditions of families into which they go. A large number of books were examined tain germs. There are very many persons who practice wetting the fingers with the lips or tongue when turning the pages of books. This is an exceedingly dangerous thing to do, not only to the person who does it, but to all others who may use the book afterward, especially if the person so doing has any form of disease in the system. Invalids of all kinds are likely to be great readers, and the consumptive or ose suffering with cancer may un wittingly deposit on the pages of the volumes they peruse the deadly germs of their own malady.

PHYSICAL HARMONY,

Therein Lies the Secret of Health

The necessity of relative harmony roughout the entire physical system cannot be too strongly urged. Herein lies the chief secret of health and long life. Manifest weakness or even predominant strength in any part opens the avenue for the invasion of disease and the approach of death. What can be done for the realization and mainte-nance of structural and vital harmony? Space would fail us to give details adapted to varying conditions, but the underlying fundamental principle for its accomplishment may be imparted in few words. Strive to strengthen and develop those parts of the body which have been slighted by nature or weakened by disease or abuse; guard zealously such structures and see that they are never subjected to undue strain or too active exertion; neglect not the improvement of every part of the economy, but seek first to improve the weakest structures; look well to organs of vital importance—the heart, lungs, kidneys, etc.—and seek especially to advance their good. A fine physique is not to be ignored, but of far greater importance are a strong pair of lungs, a normal, well guarded heart, good digestive apparatus and functionally sound kidneys. The developing and strengthening of vital structures require more skill and perseverance than the training of the mus cular system and should be conducted with much care and diligence.

JUPITER IN A MIRROR. Remarkable Phenomenon Concerning His Satellites. In a very old number of the Bulletin de la Societe Astronomique de France some one made a note of the fact that he had seen Jupiter's satellites in a mirror. The 5th of November bei clear night, a correspondent, C. D. R. Andrews, determined to make the experiment with an ordinary looking glass. "The image of Jupiter in the glass, he writes, "was distinctly accompanied by a small star on either side, one nearer the planet than the other. I then turned my telescope on the planet and found at once that the positions of satellites three and one and two co incided with the positions of the stars seen in the mirror. Satellites one and two were at the time (about 8:30 p. m.) extremely close together, and I have no doubt that these two were seen as one in the glass.

"The explanation of the phenomeno is a simple one. We cannot see the satellites in the ordinary way because Jupiter's brilliance overpowers their feebler light. In reflecting the image in the glass some of this superfluou light is lost, and the satellites are given a chance to show themselves."-
