the clans will not forget nor cease their quarrelling to unite against a common enemy."

He strode through the room in silence for a time, and seemed buried in thought. Suddenly halting he exclaimed—
"I cannot well understand this freak of my son. Whatever his object he should have returned ere now, or else have informed me that he meant to be so long away. His absence costs me much anxiety. I hope nothing has happened to him of a serious nature. He told his aunt that he went to bring his bride to Castle M'Leod; perhaps 'twas modesty kept him from reposing the same confidence in his sire. I feel uneasy at his absence; it is nearly ten days since he left. The fate of his brothers makes me the more anxions about him; and although I know thas his most bitter enemy is now removed by the hand of death, yet a strange for boding takes possession of me as I recall the circumstances under which the others were cut down. They, too, went forth in the glory of their strength, without fear of aught befalling them; and one by one they were brought back—stark and dead; each corse as it crossed the threshold sending the dagger of agony deeper and deeper into my soul. Alas! should aught befall my flector, the cup of misery will be full—to overflowing. I could not bear up against it."

it." he spoke the room door opened, and a lady noiselessly entered. She was a lady of from twenty to thirty years at least younger than M'Leod, but much resembled him in her person and features—a fine looking woman, whose hair yet retained its raven blackness, and whose native beauty still lived in her face. Advancing into the room, she placed her hand upon the Cheiftain's shoulder, and said—

A person is below, Malcolm, who de sires to see you."

"A person below, my sister—who may it be?"

"It is one of whom you will not readily guess."

"No, indeed. It is not my son returned?"
"Alas! no. Would that it were."
"Then I cannot guess."
"It is Donald Cameron of Drogh

"It is Donald Cameron of Drogh-Jarch."

What! Cameron (f Droghdairch?"
exclaimed the old man, in such a tone as betokened that he doubted whether he had heard aright.

"Even so, brother."

"What can he want with me? I doubt much if he means good to either you or me, my sister."

"I like him not. But let me tell you he mentioned that his business concerned Hector."

"I like him not. But let me tell you he mentioned that his business concerned Hector."

"Concerned Hector!" ejaculated the Chief. "Heavens, what can it mean ?"

"I did not interrogate him, brother. Snall I send him up?"

"Yes: but I am confused. Surely nothing has befallen the boy. Fate cannot have decreed that I am to outlive them all. But show him up. I shall hear what he has to say."

His sister then left the room, and, much agitated, M'Leod set himself down upon a chair, and for a second or two buried his face in his hands. When he looked up he was calm and majestic as

In a moment more Douald Cameron entered the room, proceeded by a ghillie. As he entered, he glanced nervously around, then made an effort to compose himself, as he saw that the old man sat steadily regarding him. It was evident that their relations in the past had not been of the most friendly character.

Scarcely rising from his seat, the old Chief extended his hand, stiffly, and then quietly motioned to Cameron to be seated

Chief extended his hand, stiffly, and then quietly motioned to Cameron to be seated—not a word escaping either of their lips. Cameron was the first to break the silence by saying—"Have you been informed of the object of my visit?"
"I have been informed that you desire to communicate something having connection with my son. The nature of the communication I have not learned."
As he spoke M'Leod glanned keenly at Cameron, but the latter manutained an unriffled composure, and nothing was to be read in his face.

DR. McTargart, who is to be at the Royal Hotel, Guelph, on the 11th, 12th and 13th of December, is spoken of by the London papers as follows:—"As a skillful physician in the treatment of all lingering chronic diseases, Dr. McTaggert, of London, Ont., is said to stand unrivalled. He had had extensive experience, and is spoken of in the highest terms by medical men, his patients, and the press of Canada. He has long given attention to, and made himself popular in diseases of the throat, lungs and chest, and has successfully established himself as one of the leading physicians of the Dominion."
