Canadian Fruit at the London Fall Exhibitions

The Canadian fruit was a prominent feature of the Dominion Government exhibits at the Confectioners', Bakers' and Allied Traders', the Grocers' and Allied Traders', and the Dairy Exhibitions, all held at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, N., London, England, last fall.

The fruit exhibit consisted of all the early autumn apples, Yellow Transparent, Red Astrachan, Charlottenthaler, Early Harvest, Brockville Beauty, St. Lawrence, Alexander, Wolf River, Antmann, Duchess, Wealthy, Switzer, Gravenstein, Early Joe, etc., and plums, pears, peaches and grapes, and the far famed Montreal Nutmeg melon.

Besides these natural fruits there was a large collection of fruit put up in fancy jars, in antiseptic fluids. These comprised all the small fruits, strawberries, gooseberries, currents, cherries, etc., with plums, peaches, pears, apples, grapes and tomatoes.

The manner in which this display was made

The manner in which this display was made was a great credit to Canada and resulted in a very large number of specific inquiries as to where these fruits could be procured, either from agents in Britain or from the exporters in Canada. The officials in charge gave all information possible, explaining the manner in which goods were packed, dwelling particularly on the advantages of the 40-pound box for extra choice apples, and explaining that all Canadian peaches, pears and grapes are grown in the open air, a fact not generally realized or appreciated in Great Britain.
