

- growth that works for everyone;
 - by improving food security; and
- democracy and governance.

Canada has been supporting flagship national programs that build resilience, improve agricultural productivity and enhance sustainable, climate-smart land management.

Key results

In 2016-2017, Canada's ongoing support to Ethiopia's Productive Safety Net Programme contributed to food or cash transfers to 7,997,218 food-insecure beneficiaries in 330 regions across Ethiopia. This included 4,078,853 women. The transfers are given in exchange for labour on community works. That increased household and community resilience, and improved household food security, nutrition and economic well-being.

Between 2012 and 2016, Canada's support to the Sustainable Land Management Program helped 43,839 households to rehabilitate 68,175 hectares of land. The German Society for International Cooperation operates this program with the Government of Ethiopia. The program's efforts also increase resilience to climate change impacts.

Through the World Bank's Women Entrepreneurship Development Program, more than $57 million in loans have been issued since 2014. This allows thousands of women to grow their businesses, increasing employment by 68% and profits by 78%.

From 2011 to 2016, Canada's support to the Civil Society Support Programme organization contributed to 772 grants to 514 civil society organizations across all regions of Ethiopia. This support helped deliver more inclusive services for vulnerable women, men, girls and boys.