she course of their preparation changed for the Gloucester) was the same he sailed with above eight months after from St. Helens. change of destination, the equipment of the fquadron was still profecuted with as much vigour as ever, and the victualling, and whatever depended on the Commodore, was so far advanced, that he conceived the ships might be capable of putting to fea the inftant he should receive his final orders, of which he was in daily expectation. And at last, on the 28th of June 1740, the Duke of Newcastle, Principal Secretary of State, delivered to him his Majesty's instructions, dated January 31, 1739, with an additional instruction from the Lords Justices, dated June 19, 1740. On the receipt of these. Mr. Anson immediately repaired to Spithead, with a resolution to sail with the first fair wind, flattering himself that all his delays were now at an end. For though he knew by the musters that his fquadron wanted three hundred feamen of their complement, (a deficiency which, with all his affiduity, he had not been able to get supplied) yet, as Sir Charles Wager informed him. that an order from the board of Admiralty was dispatched to Sir John Norris to spare him the numbers which he wanted, he doubted not of his complying therewith. But on his arrival at Portsmouth, he found himself greatly mistaken, and disappointed in this persuasion: for on his application, Sir John Norris told him, he could spare him none, for he wanted men for his own B 4
