THE OPPOSITION MUST FORCE A DISSOLUTION.

In considering the course they ought to pursue against the Government in the matter of the recent election frauds, the Opposition should first of all sift the evidence and separate that which has been proved and is undisputed from that which has not been substantiated by proven facts. We propose to do so and to show how the case stands.

It has been established that a so-called machine was organized for the purpose of stealing the elections for the Liberal candidates in various constituencies, principally in the by-elections.

It has been established that the Government made no effort to secure the arrest and imprisonment of the criminals connected with the machine.

It has been proved that the Government paid no attention to the petition of various residents of the Province praying for the prosecution of certain of the criminals whose guilt was openly avowed.

It has been proved that the Attorney-General advised the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to disobey a subpoena of the court commanding him to give evidence.

It has been proved that the Government in a criminal manner while in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown.

It has been admitted that the destruction or disappearance of this documentary evidence took place in April, and that the Government kept the matter a secret for 10 months.

It is admitted that no efforts were made during these 10 months, by detectives or otherwise, to locate the individuals guilty of the destruction of the ballots.

It has been proved that the Government has taken no steps to secure the dismissal of the Clerk of the Crown, whose negligence the ballots were stolen or destroyed.

It has been proved that one member of the Government, at least, viz., the Minister of Agriculture, possessed a knowledge of the doings of the machine, and that he controlled one member of the machine.

It is admitted that the Government, and the Clerk of the Crown, were the parties of the criminal work of the machine, viz., the falsification of the ballots.

It is a fact that the Government had a very small majority after the general election, and that the criminality of the machine in the by-elections turned the balance of the Government when the holding of honest elections would have left it in a minority.

These facts are all damning when viewed separately, but it is their cumulative effect that tells most against the Government. What the province needs is a woman together we find that the so-called machine was carrying on its criminal work for the benefit of, and with the knowledge of, the Government; that the Government protected the members of the machine from criminal prosecution; that it advised its own officials to disobey subpoenas issued by a court in which a member of the machine was on trial on a criminal offence; that the Government shielded the official who was the criminal, and who was the agent of the machine, from criminal prosecution; that it advised its own officials to disobey subpoenas issued by a court in which a member of the machine was on trial on a criminal offence; that the Government shielded the official who was the criminal, and who was the agent of the machine, from criminal prosecution;
