Dr. Reid went on to declare that questions were put on the order paper in order to get information for persons who were seeking contracts from the Government. This was in reference to a question asked by F. F. Pardee of Lambton regarding insurance. The minister, took the ground that questions regarding the national railways and merchant marine must be put to the corporation which was running them. The management, headed by D. B. Hanna, was subject to its own auditors, to the scrutiny of a special set of auditors, and finally to the auditor-general.

Canadian authorities in touch with the situation had very little doubt that much of this was being marketed in the United States without the legal supervision of that country and the present legislation, now submitted for second reading, was aimed to control the traffic through Canada.

About Merchant Marine.

When the House reconvened the committee sitting on the opium act rose and reported progress, and the House information with regard to the rainways and merchant marine was detrimental to their operation, charged that a question put by Mr. A. W. Chisholm of Inverness was designed to furnish political capital to that gentleman.

"He wants the question to use on the stump throughout the country to destroy the merchant marine," Dr. Reid insisted, amid cries of disapproval from the Opposition.

Secret Management.

Mr. D. D. McKenzie refused to accept Dr. Reid's statement, and referred to "the secret service management of government railways."

The minister of railways dared to come before the House and say that any facts that would hurt the Government would not be divulged. "That," said Mr. McKenzie, "was a grand, spanking new idea."

At a late hour Sir Henry Drayton, minister of finance, made a brief speech in which he asked a fair chance for the Canadian National Railways. The management should not be protected against wrongdoing, neither should they be open to widespread fishing expeditions, which could do nothing but condemn the project to failure before it started.

Opium and Drugs.

In explaining his amended opium and drugs act to the House, Mr. Rowell stated that it was aimed to establish a greater measure of control over the traffic in Canada of opium, morphine codene, heroin and cocaine.

The effect of the first Canadian legislation in 1908 had been to reduce the imports of these drugs into Canada until in 1910 they had dropped in two years from 81,000 pounds annually to 6,418 pounds. In 1917 these imports doubled the previous year and continued to mount until in 1919 the figures for the ten months ending March 31, 1919, stood at 37,210 pounds. The department of health was then formed and took over active administration of the Mouse order paper. Dr. H. S. Beland asked the minister of railways whether, in the event of a deficit, on the national railways, it would be in a position to give the members all the information they required. He falled to see, however, how it could be in the public interest to go into every minor detail in connection with the management of the Government system.
