A stout little man, wrapped in a gray overcoat, just the color of his hair, with a fringe of white whiskers under his chin, bright blue eyes and a brown to the window, and then pointed to the wrinkled complexion-Miss Rice seldom saw such a customer in her employment office, and the showily dress-ed candidates for place giggled a little soft wind. A tall figure, bronzed in as the man stood in the midst of the the face, was striding through. room, his fur driving gloves in one hand and his whip in the other. 'Is this the employment office?' asked

Uncle John Trotcombe, as Miss Rice advanced to meet him. 'This is the place, sir.' said Miss Rice 'What can we-'

'I want a gal,' said Uncle John. 'A domestic?' 'Well, yes, if that's what you call it.

In what capacity, sir?'

'To discharge what duties!' explain-'To help round the house generally. My wife, she's down with the rheumatics, and so I want a gal.' What remuneration are you prepared to offer, sir?"

'Which?' asked Uncle John, with his hand behind his ear.

'Wages,' said Miss Bice, shortly. 'Oh! Well, it's an easy place-only my wife and me, but it's out in the country-'a tossing of heads and elevating of noses among the candidates on the employment benches -- ' and there's cows and chickens to see to, and chores to do, but I'm willin' to pay what's right; and I want to take a gal back with me in the red cutter as is waitin' at the door.' And so saying, he sat down and glanced at the help who occupied the back benches of the ing and coaxing, but not a damsel could be found to volunteer.

'In the country, indeed!' said one. 'And only one help kept!' sniffed an-

'Glad you're suited, Betsy. By degrees Aunt Betsy wiled the stranger's sad story from her. 'Poor lamb! She's got a husband somewhere,' said Mrs. Trotcombe. 'There was meddlesome friends, and he was jealous without a reason.' 'Or with one,' said Uncle John shrewdly. 'Don't tell me;' said Aunt Betsy; 'and she ran away to her own folks; and they were dead, and she was too proud to go back and tell her husband what she had suffered; and finally she fell sick and nearly died in a hospital. When she recovered, she saw everything in such a different light that she begged and worked her way back to her husband's house; but when she got there, the house was shut up, and he was gone to Europe.
