PAQUITA.

By BILLIE GLYNN.

"Then, while I am still Sir Lancelot and you are the Queen," I responded, "while it is still the time of King Arthur's Court—I salute you in the manner of the age. Oh, but I will!"

And slowly did I master the white, ungloved hand, returned to keep from me, and put it to my lips—and I could see the blood mount to her face even in the shadows.

"Sir Lancelot," she warned, adopting my manner of speech and subduing her confusion "you're a brave man, but beware, the King. Beware the King, I say!" Then, as an afterthought apparently, "Will you do your Queen a mission?"

"To the end of the world and back," I averred earnestly.

"Oh, not that far. In yonder orchard—and she pointed to the way-side in the farthest row of trees, grow cherries that are ripe and luscious to the taste." Bring me some, Sir Lancelot, bring me some."

She took the lines from me after as she spoke—and I was out of the barouche in a moment—thoughtless of what I was—and with a knightly courtesy had set off on the errand.

"Many, many adventures" she called after me gaily.

It was a large orchard and the farthest row of trees was a considerable distance away. I got the fruit, however, and returned—then stood there cursing myself in the moonlight for the idiot I had been.

Red barouche, lady and all were gone—not even a hoof-beat.

Sowly I took my way to the park and sat down on the bench I had pointed out. How long I remained there thinking I do not know, but I must have slept for a few minutes. The moon suddenly appeared over a tree-top smiling down at me. I arose—stretching out my arms to the tune of the night. "Paquita!" I breathed half passionately, "Paquita!"

And yet, the word was spoken more to something I had dreamt than lived for that is how I felt about it.

Strangely enough it was in the moonlight here at the park and in this very place that I met here the second time. Haunted by an acute sense of incompleteness and unfortunate in my inquiries, I had lingered in the town till the last night of the carnival hoping for such a meeting. Now, at the moment when I had practically given it up, it had come.

There were three of them—all in crimson white that shook in the moonlight. The two had paused to get a drink at the fountain and left her standing there alone. Then suddenly she turned and we stood staring at each other.

"Sir Lancelot!" she gasped, a faint color coming into her cheeks.

"Paquita!" I echoed softly.

Then in the silence which ensued we heard the other two scampering away—and a whimsical voice rang to us out of the shadows.

"Oh, Paquita, Paquita!" It called. "We leave you to your knight." Elfish laughter followed, shaken lightly to us like grains of gold in a sieve, then silence.

For an instant Paquita had looked worried—but her old zest came back to her.

"Dear me," she said, "so it is again the time of King Arthur and his court. In some strange way have I been dreaming of an age far on in which there were rose carnivals that came to an end—and girls that ran away. The cherries, Sir Knight, where are the cherries?"

"Come with the red barouche," I replied, "and the girl who ran away."

"But I didn't get any—I didn't!"

"They slipped in your cheeks," I interposed, "approaching her and looking into the hazel eyes so brightly, meaningly lit. "They are in your cheeks—And I have been dreaming of them ever since."

She laughed a little, drawing slightly away. "What a dreamer you are Sir Knight!" she mocked. "I have not thought of you since."

"You have—yet you know you have," I corrected, with a direct glance. "Admit it—Paquita!"

She laughed again—this time with a fluttering, subdued note. "I mean—I have tried not to."

"Because why?" I asked. "Because why?" Paquita? And I was near to her again.

"She lifted her eyes with a hint of recklessness. "Because of the King, I guess."

Suddenly I caught her hands. Was it just the madness of the carnival on me or what? "Paquita," I pleaded eagerly, "I want to be the King. I want you to be my Queen. You're the only kingdom I care for in all the world. I have been thinking of you, thinking of you, and I know I love you."

"But isn't it nice being just Sir Lancelot?" she asked in a sort of breathlessness, endeavoring to draw away from me. "The Queen you know, did not love me. She was not—it isn't it rather sudden? You do not even know me—you see—and—"

For an instant she seemed to face anxiously, as with some desire of absolute analysis—then dropped her eyes.

"One does not love a name," I said. "But a woman. In that way I do know you. I know and remember your slightest gesture, the faintest shading of your glance, your lips—the unspoken things that look like wildflowers out of your eyes. You're my dream and I want you always. Oh, Paquita, Paquita!"

Then—before she could reply—the fountain with its statue suddenly jetted out a rush of gauzy lighter, two white-robed figures appeared as if by magic and negated about pointed mischievous fingers at us.

In the unexpectedness of the rally my hands that held Paquita's, had quit their hold. She stood for just an instant as if betting the pulsating atmosphere that had encompassed us, then, as it were, the alarm suddenly becoming real to her awakened sensibilities, she glowed with a bit of a laugh which I fancied afterward carried a tone of regret.

For a moment the other two continued to torment me—as I felt back on my bench in despair, then hurried away too with quick mercuriality. It was five minutes later, perhaps, that I remembered I should have followed my quest at my negation—at the moon riding so jauntily there on the ragged branch of an oak. Again Paquita was gone—and I did love her!

Some two weeks later it was, in the nearby city where I was located, that I became acquainted with Crisp. Never before had I been so taken with a man. Bohemian that I am, I make friends easily any way—but in this case it was different. We were kindred spirits. Englishman he was—but such an Englishman!—high-bred and with a humor and zest that never permitted him to become blasé. Wanderer, like myself, he had seen much of it too, but was still young, smiling and ardent as ever. We met at a club one night over a bottle of real Parisian and afterwards I saw him frequently. He lived in fashionable quarters in a quiet district—for they were more on the romantic than the staid, meaning himself and his wife—and he had asked me down on several occasions.

IRA'S CONTRIBUTION.

(From the Beacon, Point Pleasant, N.)

A number of the young friends of William Kennedy gathered at his house last Friday in honor of his fifteenth birthday anniversary. A pleasant evening was enjoyed with numerous games and a few selected pieces. Delicious refreshments were served, after which Ira Thompson fell down into the cellar, but fortunately was unharmed.

AMUSEMENTS.

BENNETT IN TOBERMORY TODAY.

There is to be an entirely new programme at the Nickel today. Harry Bennett, the Lauder impersonator, will again be heard in a typical Scotch song, "Tobermory," which is familiar to many as one of Harry Lauder's finest talking machine records. The song will be sung in full kilted costume and is sure to please everybody.

One of the features of the past week has been the remarkable singing of Miss Annie Edwards, St. John's girl soprano. Miss Edwards continues in her song "Daddy." The leading picture feature will be Thos. A. Edison's "society comedy," The Burglar Cupid. Pathe's latest bewilderment, The Bewitched Manor House, and the comedy, Tommy's Own Invention, concludes the picture bill. Mr. Courtains and the orchestra.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST AND SACRED SOLOS AT THE UNIQUE TODAY.

Today's Unique programme will be by far the best ever offered in that popular house. The greatest of all stories, The Life of Christ, will be told pictorially from the birth to the ascension. As previously announced, the programme is too long to be given in its entirety during the evening, and a portion will be shown tonight and the balance tomorrow night. But at the matinees today, Thursday and Friday, the entire show will be given, running almost an hour and a half. It will thus be wise for all who can do so to attend the matinee. If this is impossible, attend at sharp seven in the evening. Great as are the attractive powers of this great picture play, the magnificent singing of Mr. Kilcynne will be almost equally so. The Unique's splendid base will be heard in two appropriate sacred selections, namely, The Holy City, by Adams; and Face to Face, by Herbert Johnston.

Then an added feature which all will appreciate will be a specially prepared lecture explaining in detail every illustration in the story as it is thrown on the canvas. If one cannot attend the matinee by all means be early at night.

PINE SHOW AT THE PRINCESS.

"We may be crazy, but we ain't no tawdring duty proposed at the Princess, and the large and well pleased audience present last evening agreed with him on the point that the dramatic picture entitled 'A Just Reward' certainly are a highly entertaining team and were greeted with rounds of applause. Gardner Lowell, the clever comedy acrobat, and his trained dog opened their engagement that night, and they jumped into immediate favor. Mr. Lowell is one of the cleverest acrobats seen here for some time, and the trained dog is a theatre. There are four other good pictures. T. A. B. Waterall has a new song for today. Avoid rushes, attend the matinee.

TONIGHT'S NEW SHOW AT STAR.

Another brand new show at the "Star" in North End tonight and tomorrow. The leading feature will be a dramatic picture entitled "A Just Reward," but for those who enjoy travel views the visit to famous Biarritz will be a treat. This is the great Biarritz ocean resort frequented by King Edward. Other pictures are: The Hypnotist, Those A Fool Boy, The Mad Dog and the Rustic Flute.

THE SIZE SHE WANTED.

The woman went to the bookstore and asked for a globe.

"What size do you want?" asked the clerk, turning one on its pivot for her to look at the various and sundry countries in pink and blue.

"I think," said the woman, "that you may give me one life size."—New York Times.

TAILOR WHO LOOKED LIKE THE KAREEN

(From M. A. P.)

The German Emperor is in the peculiar predicament of having no less than two doubles. One, a certain Herr Nitzche, follows the humdrum and prosaic calling of a chimney sweep. A year or two ago when the Emperor was staying at a small German watering place, so the story goes, a tailor of the locality, suddenly waking up to the fact that he was rather like his Majesty, had his moustache trimmed accordingly, curled the style of dress as nearly as possible and boldly sallied forth into the town in his regalia. Run over by a policeman, he was arrested with a peremptory recommendation to alter his appearance or else leave town. He chose the latter course.

THE U. S. TARIFF

May be Seriously Delayed—

Wants Tariff Commission—J.

Competition Alters Rates—

Duty on Coffee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30.—There is imminent danger that Payne tariff bill may be seriously delayed in its consideration by the house. President Taft was in conference today with Speaker Cannon, Representative Payne (New York), the floor leader and Representative Dail (Pennsylvania). While nothing could be learned as to the determination reached at this conference, it is understood that the house leaders impressed the chief executive with the unfavorable situation regarding the tariff bill and the difficulty being experienced in getting the Republican members in line to vote for a rule which would expedite the passage of the measure.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30.—A meeting of the executive committee of the committee of one hundred, created at the National Tariff Commission convention, held last month at Indianapolis began a series of sessions in this city today. It is the design of the committee as voiced by the convention to have formed a tariff committee to take testimony and consider thoroughly the whole tariff question and make to congress recommendations as to changes in the tariff schedule.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30.—Information that Japan soon will be a competitor of the United States in the manufacture of every character of silk goods for which raw material is now imported into this country entered largely into the consideration of the silk schedules today by the senate committee on finance. The result was a decision by the committee not to adopt the rates of the Payne bill, which for the most part provides for the re-enactment of the Dingley rates.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30.—Recognizing that Brazil is powerful enough to suspend her export duties on sugar for the next several years, at least, this tax is indissolubly linked with her foreign debt. The senate must on finance today decide whether to strike out of the Payne bill the tariffing duty proposed on sugar.

The committee said today that if Payne provision is adopted in effect would place a duty on coffee from Brazil equal to the export tax assessed by that country and the consumer would be compelled to pay the difference in cost. The responsibility of such a result could not be shifted, it was said, and congress would have to answer to the people for this assessment against a necessity of life.
