For the last eighty-two years the course of study pursued in King's College has in its general features been modelled on the system in force in the University of Oxford, but the many and growing changes in education, introduced into the great Universities at home and everywhere rendered necessary, have led the Board of Governors to adopt a new Curriculum, which has been carefully modelled to meet the necessities of the age, prominent among which stands a sound training in Science. Henceforth the University will grant degrees and diplomas in Science.

It is evident that the present staff of professors, even with unsparing industry, can not carry out in its integrity the whole Curriculum, but the Board of Governors have not hesitated to adopt it, hoping that the advantages to be derived from it will be so patent to all the friends of education that their assistance will enable the Board speedily to make the necessary additions to the staff.
