would you believe...

Feed your kid junk food and you may well wind up with an anemic, undersized child.

That's the finding of Robert Karp, a Philadelphia pediatrician, who studied some 220 primary school children. Karp found that seven percent of the children were shorter, and had weaker muscles and less hemoglobin in their blood. He also found that the puny kids tended to center their diet on junk foods such as candy, ice cream, sodas and potato chips. (Newscrip)

According to a recent survey, heavy manual laborers such as construction workers, garbage men, and longshoremen, find their jobs more satisfying than does anyone else - more than managers, clerks, and salespeople. In contrast, professional and technical workers like their work less than anyone else surveyed.

Management Professor Charles Weaver made the survey, which reverses most studies of job satisfaction. In those, satisfaction generally has increased right along with job level. In contrast to the earlier studies, Weaver specifically measured the satisfaction of the actual work involved, excluding things such as money, prestige, and benefits.

"Apparently", Weaver concluded, "manual labor is more job satisfying (at least to those laborers who do it) than professional work is to professionals." (Newscrip)

It seems that more troops are lining up for battle with The Orange Juice Lady. San Francisco columnist Herb Caen reports that Lou Nova, the one-time heavy-weight great who fought Joe Louis and Max Baer, is the newly-elected president of the Gay Prizefighters of American organization.

Lou also lectures to garden clubs on daffodils and pansies - his specialty. "There is too much violence in this country," says the man who knocked out Max Baer twice. "We need flower people, like Gay Prizefighters." (Newscrip)

Cat Ramses II, a beautiful Siamese Cat with a nose for detective work, earned his merit badge in investigative catwork when he stubbornly failed to heed the voice of his master James Ramsey.

Ramsey, after giving police a report on a burglary in his and a neighboring apartment, called for his cat, only to find him stalking the door of yet a third apartment. Ramsey smelled a rat and called the police back, who promptly broke down the door and found Anthony Brooks hiding under the bed along with the loot from all three apartments. (Newscrip)

Mrs. Elsie Schnieder of San Diego doesn't need a seeing eye dog for her blindness - not when she's got a seeing eye cat. Rhubarb, her part-Siamese cat, has been Mrs. Schnieder's eyes for 16 years with no bones about it.

"She seemed to know right from the start that I was blind," said Mrs. Schnieder. "After a little training with a ten foot rope, she became my seeing-eye cat."

Rhubarb takes Mrs. Schnieder to the market, out to the trash, and even wakes her up when she hears a strange noise outside. (Newscrip)

Do you have trouble remembering the name of our boss' wife, your anniversary, or what stall you parked your car in this morning? Then you might want to consider hypnosis or meditation.

When an obstetrician, also an authority on hypnosis, decided to see if hypnotized people could recall their births; he found, to his surprise, that they could. Many people even recounted medical details later confirmed by their doctors.

A Bulgarian physician, Georgi Lozanov, is using hypnosis and yoga in a practical way, to improve learning. His technique, called Suggestology, creates a relaxed, attentive state in which students memorize information rapidly. His students take three months to cover a typical one-year language course.

Even meditation can improve your memory. Various techniques, including Zen, Yoga and TM seem to free information buried in the unconscious, so it becomes conscious once again. (Newscrip)

Doomsayers are fond of saying that if we don't mend our ways, cockroaches will inherit the earth. New research, however, indicates that instead of taking over, they might just help save the situation for mankind.

The common cockroach, like many other animals including man, has the embarrassing and uncomfortable habit of producing methane gas in its tiny gut. Small as it is, weight-for-weight, it produces more methane - which burns quite smartly - than just about any other animal.

Local wits may chortle at the thought of little bugs tottering around with gas pains. But the entrepreneurs in the crowd will surely see the wisdom of collecting all that roach gas and using it to solve the energy crisis. (Newscrip)

John Singleton, owner of the Viking Giant Submarine Shop in San Francisco, had more than his share of tricks this Halloween.

Singleton told police this week that he was robbed by a pirate, Dracula and someone wearing purple facial make-up and a full-length satin robe. The three goblins entered the submarine shop on Halloween night and ordered sandwiches. After eating, the pirate drew his two-foot silver sword, put it to Singleton's throat and said "Give me all your money". Without asking whether the incident was a trick or treat, Singleton opened his cash register and handed over $93. (bucks) (Newscrip)

You know how it is with Texans. Well, Texas department stores are exactly the same way.

Two posh Texas stores - Nieman Marcus and Sakowitz - have been holding a little competition, seeing who can outdo whom in offering absolutely outrageous Christmas gifts for those who don't need them.

Sakowitz wins hands down this year with - would you believe - a real live flying saucer shaped hovercraft. The aircraft seats six, cruises at 325 miles per hour, and according to the catalogue, is "perfect for traveling around large ranches."

If you want one, be prepared to write a Texas-sized check for $1,125,000 (dollars). (Newscrip)

Sheriff says obesity okay

The Sheriff of Prince George's County, Virginia, held a press conference the other day to respond to a grand jury report questioning both his honesty and administration.

His men are not "undereducated and untrained", as suggested in the report, said Sheriff Don Ansell. He told assembled reporters that 35 of his 270 deputies have college degrees - neglecting to mention that 79 deputies don't even have a high school diploma.

Are his deputies "obese"? Well maybe they are, but they have a right to be fat, declared Ansell, who pointed out that the "Surgeon General of the United States has determined that the majority of the American public is legally obese, and common sense dictates (that) obesity is no more disqualifying than a person's race, color or creed."

The Sheriff chose not to discuss the grand jury's finding of "favoritism, cronyism and nepotism" in his administration. Nor did he wish to discuss his indictment for alleged misappropriation of funds, lying to a grand jury and filing a fraudulent state tax return. (Newscrip)
