

as he did not think he had any further need of it, And as the dates were all in it, of the delivery of flour bread and meat, I could not read them over: Mr Graye stating that the pass book Alway had was the only account kept between them. Alway admitted to me that Mr Graye had fully paid him for all rants due on the first lease of his land, and that he was fully satisfied with the flour bread and meat so furnished.
