ANIMAL TALE WITH NEW TOUCH

Hay Fever Disease of Nerve and Not of Nose—Frost Kills It?

(Detroit News)

Of course you understand that hay fever comes from golden rod, and as golden rod is very late around Detroit this year there will be no hay fever. Has-a he his he-ardonic laughter. Mocking, imply, you're another laughter. Because no matter what you understand or how late golden rod is, hay fever is here just the same, dab the bad thing anyhow.

A few weeks ago Detroit was flooded with a little booklet, cute little male gray booklets, and they were gotten out by the Hay Fever Association of America and every blame member of the thing has got, has had or will have hay fever. It was a depressing little book and held out no more hope than a second mortgage. There was a lot of discussion of symptoms and some suggestions to resorts in the book and it was supposed to be almost nothing, but there was an air of cynical doubt a lack of enthusiastic belief in the resorts, and it was plain to see that the members were in pessimistic gang as ever took out a charter and invented a title.

Detroit hay feverites are many. They can be told by their little red noses and the Chastiquis salutes they give themselves every other minute and the bulge in their pockets indicating relays of handkerchiefs. Speaking of handkerchiefs, there is a fortune awaiting for the man who will put a hay fever handkerchief on the market about this time of year. It should be about a cross between a napkin and a sheet in size and of very, oh, very, soft texture. Once a man with hay fever had a birthday in the middle of the almanac and a maiden aunt sent him a dozen handkerchiefs as a present but they were maiden aunt sort of handkerchiefs, neat but small. They had a very exciting time at the homie trial and the jury had a foreman with hay fever, so they found him not guilty and—

They Even Fear Pictures

But that is aside from the question. For years lots of Detroit men have believed that hay fever and golden rod have a community of interests and they bitterly opposed the use of the flower as the national blossom. His picture is enough, sometimes, to get the victim started, psychic suggestion and all that sort of jolly rot, you know. Now that golden rod has had a crop failure it seemed to prove that the old idea was mere superstition. (Note: Don't send the editor golden rod to prove him wrong. He has nothing to do with this piece and there are several convalescents about the office.)

This, by the way, is a yearly story, and it has been the custom heretofore to call up a physician or two, and have him say something about hay fever. They never said anything very brilliant and generally were cross, because they were bothered but custom is custom, so one was called this time, and what do you think, the rascal had it himself!

It was clear and concise and told me that Gray's Anatomy, or whatever it was that Gray wrote in addition to his "Elegy in this Phyric Churchyard," ever did. This physician added that he thought it was "dabbling his foot in a mab and spoofing him at this." Then he sneezed in the telephone and acted as if a draft were blowing in through the transmitter, so the conversation came to abrupt end.

Last year the man wrote the yearly hay fever piece was highly amused because the artist who had to illustrate it had up his residence and made him cry in his ink to draw things about it, but he was so cross and sulky and indignant and peevish about it, that he never drew a thing. He hopes there won't be an illustration this year.

Oh, yes; something should be said about the frost killing hay fever. That is a firmly-rotated belief.

Dr. A. S. DeWitt, who is a diagnostician in the Kresge building, tells what strange and weird diseases are that are trying to fool a regular practitioner, explained this. He said the frost killed the weeds and they became trampled under foot and the pollen was mixed with the earth and lost or died or something. He let something else out too, that was interesting. In other words, it is a nerve not a nose disease. In the last year or so they have been experimenting with a vaccine, he said, a sort of antitoxin affair that is injected into the victim before the hay fever gets him altogether, and it has worked in some cases—and in others it doesn't. Apple and peach tree pollen is just as bad for some persons as golden rod, and in fact like any other neurotic-based disease, it depends on the individual just what he will pick out for a store and fauna bugaboo.

Please the Majority

If you have hay fever you probably have read this with the same degree of fascination that you would watch a cannibal king chew the scalp of his mother-in-law, you heartily disliked reading about what you think is a most serious thing treated in a manner altogether frivolous. But, you see, the majority of folks have not got it, and so them it's as funny as watching the other fellow slip on a banana peel.

And the majority must be pleased.
