It was a complete reversal of form, the Brantford seven trimming the Hams in the Ambitious City by a good margin, while the game last night showed that the visitors were much the best. Sex Is a Handicap. Mrs. Harold Gorst, whose work as a novelist has many appreciative readers, is of opinion that her sex is a business handicap. "If a woman wants to make money by writing," he says, "and has any original ideas as regards subject matter or style, it will pay her better to adopt a man's name and keep her identity

There is a good deal of truth in Mrs. Gorst's contention, which has been shared by women writers as far back as Miss Evans, universally known as George Eliot. Much later in the history of fiction Olive Schreiner's startling novel, "The Story of an African Farm," came out under the penname of Ralph Iron, though the writer's identity leaked out after a year or two. Lord Rocksavage, who has not yet celebrated his thirtieth year, is one of the young exquisites of the day in London. He is a handsome man, well known in the polo field, with a great reputation as a shot. He is always dressed in the height of fashion, for he plays no small part in setting what the young bloods shall wear.

He has lately been endeavoring to introduce the fashion of wearing side whiskers that curl in front of the ears, and some of his own set have followed his lead. Ere long we may find male faces covered with fungus. A good story is told of him which hits him off in a characteristic man-
