A correspondent of the Michigan Farmer prefers the Red Dutch Currant on secount of its hardiness. He plants in rows 8 or ten feet spart, affording plenty of space for good culture. He gives the following hints for the snocessful culture of the currant. Plant on North side of walls, keep the bushes in compact form, trim off straggling branches and cut off and burn any stocks in which the borer is detected. Any soil that will grow potatoes will do for currants. Manure and ashes are the best fertilisers. As to the currant worm "eternal vigilance" is the currant worm weternal vigilance" is the currant worm weternal vigilance in the plants back. Cut the branches into sections about 8 inches long, stick them in mellow soil 3 inches apart and 2 inches out the ground. Cover them with earth when heavy frosts are expected and in the spring you will have a lot of thrifty plants ready for setting.
