Lawrence D'Orsay, the English prior, who has an accent as English prior, who has an accent as English prior, who has an accent as English prior, they make 'orn, does not like American bartenders in St. Louis he entertains a particular aversion. "I went into a bar in St. Louis, he cach boy," he said on one occasion, "and I ordered a bottle of beer. The bartendah, don't you know, did not hand me the beer. He dashed it down on the bar and slid it along for about ten or twelve feet, don't you know it stopped right in front of me. I look-ed at him with a stony stare, as was uite propah but he pard no attention to me.

Then I gave him a quartah. Fe three on the bar a coin, which rolled on the floor. Again I stared at him, as if to mault him, but he paid no attention to me whatevah — none whatevah. So I called a small black boy, and I said to him: "Tor will find a coin on the floor, and you can heve it for your trouble." "Then I said to the barterdah: "If you will come from beaind that bar, I will kick into your "program on the part of a barterdah:" "Hut he would not come from beaind that bar, I will kick into your "program on the part of a barterdah: "But, said one of the istrement of the bar. Then I gave him the kick wilch him the movied ge of what is polite and propah on the part of a barterdah."
