Some Men Swear--Others Just Smoke

This is just another fisherman's story. A pipe and tobacco have something to do with it. Somehow when a man's in the worst luck, a few pulls at the little old pipe help to buck up courage, make him able to grin yell, "Next!" But the story Reedy The late William Marion Reedy went tuna fishing off the Pacific Coast "The tuna are kept in a roundhouse somewhere over near Japan," he wittee was read and adopted wrote, "and one of them is released also that of the Treasurer, every so often to make the round trip of the Pacific.' Out in a motor launch with a boatman, he finally hooked one—a sixtypounder. The boat had to do a merrygo-round to keep the line from going under the keel. He reeled and un-reeled to keep the line from parting. For 1 hour and 11 minutes man and tired out: it began to come in, when: boatman stoops for the gaff and the fisherman raises the pole to an approximation of the perpendicular—crack! The line parts like a fiddle-

Sometimes the home newspaper turns up in a foreign land and carries a tender message to the man who is forced to temporary exile. It means a great deal then, even though it be a week or a month old. Everywhere, every day, the newspapers leave the press to start on a journey of service across continents, oceans, mountains and plains. Everywhere they carry the news of the world-to the man on the street, to the old greybeard by the fireside and to the settler in his log cabin. But if each copy of a newspaper had a soul, and a mind, and a tongue to talk, it might wish to choose its own journey.
