"I believe it is identical," he muttered.

"Come, Belle," she said. "Robert is "Now I know why it has such a familiar ng to carry you to the carriage but look."
It let me put this wrap around you."
Nonsense, auntie, I can walk as well pocke ms I ever could, only my clothes cling to me rather uncomfortably," Miss Belle said, with a light laugh, but rising as the spoke and submitting to be wrapped in an elegant white lap-cover which the coachman had been sent to get, and which had the letters "I. K. L." in the form of a monogram embroidered in gold she flatly refused to be carried, and walked to the coach without even being helped.

Kenneth accompanied them, and waited until they were comfortably seated.

Just as they were about to start Belle leaned out of the window and said impulsively, while her large blue eyes were fixed earnestly upon his face:

"Mr. Keith, I want you to remember that I shall always be your friend for what you have done today, and you will be mine, won't you? "I am sure I shall be very happy to re-gard you as my friend," Kenueth an-swered, bowing and smiling, but with a quick glance at Miss Kavanagh, who seemed to be absorbed in arranging another robe about herself and Belle, and

"No. 85 — avenue," Kenneth repeated, without committing himself, as he saw a frown flit across Miss Kavanagh's patrician face, and knew that she did not approve of the invitation. "Thank himself away when the woman leaned toward him and said:

"Will you give me your address, Mr.
Keith? I think I may like to communicate with you by mail."
Kenneth mentioned his place of business of ness, sayin gthat a letter would reach him there. Then she nodded him a state-ly adieu. Belle tossed him a little kiss, the coachman touched his horses with his whip, and the carriage, with its interest-ing occupants, rolled away. Kenneth called another, and was driven directly to his boarding-house, where, after getting himself into a dry suit of after getting himself into a dry suit of clothes, he ate his supper, after which he paid a visit to his employer to get directions regarding his morrow's duties. A few days later, as Kenneth was siting at his desk, busily engaged upon an article entitled "Throgh Fire and Flood," in which he was giving a sketch of his own experiences during the last two weeks, a letter was laid before him. The superscription was in a beautiful hand; it was almost like engraving, it was of the and perfect while foo there was so fine and perfect, while, too, there was something familiar in its appearance. Opening it with some curiosity, he drew forth the inclosure, which consisted of two separate letters. Unfolding one of them, he read these words, written in the same hand as the address:

"Mr. Keith,—Money, I know, can never compensate for heroic deeds, such as you performed less: Wednesday; but I feel that I must make some expression of the gratitude which I and my niece owe you; therefore will you accept the inyou; therefore, will you accept the in-closed as a slight testimonial of the re-turn we would be glad to make you? Respectfully and gratefully yours, Katherine Kavanagh."

Kenneth's face was scarlet as he laid down this note and took up the other paper that had fallen upon his desk. It was a check made out in his name, for one thousand dollars.

With flashing eyes and sternly com-pressed lips, the young man seized his pen, drew forward a sheet of paper and wrote the following:
"Miss Kavanagh: Dear Madam,—Allow me to express my appreciation of the motives which prompted sending the inclosed check to my address. I am a poor man, and a thousand dollars is a large sum to my unaccustomed eyes; but could not accept it, either as a gift or as a return for service which I was only too glad to render your niece a few days ago. I simply performed my duty, and would have done the same for the humblest child in the land. Respectfully yours, Kenneth Keith."

He folded the note and inclosed it. together with the check, in an envelope, addressed and stamped it; then calling an errand-boy, he sent it down to the mail box, after which he resumed his interrupted duties as if nothing unusual had occurred, although there was a look of pain on his face, as if he had been wounded at a sensitive point.

CHAPTER XIII.

Later in the day, when Kenneth was gathering up some of his papers, he came across Miss Kavanagh's note again. He was about to toss it into the wastebasket, when some impulse prompted him to again examine the superscription, which he thought the most beautiful handwriting that he had ever seen.

"Smells Very Good."

Suddenly he started, and a strange pal-

He laid it down, drew forth a leather pocketbook from his coat, and taking from it a folded paper, which looked yellow and worn with time, he spread it out before him, and read it carefully through.

The writing upon this piece of paper was beautifully fine and clear, and these were the words it contained:

"Let the child who was left at this asylum on the night of November 20th, be called Kenneth Keith. Give him the best of core, be will be called for within best of care; he will be called for within two years."

He drew from its envelope the note which he had received from Miss Kava-nagh that morning, and compared it with these mysterious commands.

The writing of each seemed to be idenwith the other.

Chicago, Nov. 8 .- A complete history of Cresceus, the champion trotter, is given out for the first time by George H. Ketcham, breeder and driver, and is as follows:

"I was led to buy Mabel, Cresceus" dam, through seeing Nightingale as a 4-year-old step a mile in 2:27, which I then considered a very wonderful performance. Shortly after I purchaser Robert McGregor, and the following year Mabel was bred to him. Cresceus was the resulting foal.

"As a yearling Cresceus had a severe attack of epizootic and was blistered. In some manner he rubbed off the blister over the half-door of his stall and sawed his neck so that his windpipe was exposed. He presented such a horrible appearance that I ordered him destroyed, but, as luck, or, I should say, fate, would have it, Tim Mueren, my trainer, was too busy or careless, and it was put off until next morning, when he was found to be so much better that the trainer decided over, 15.1 hands or over, certified to be in foal, or have produced a foal in 1902—Victoria Third, ch. h., owner Frederick C. "We worked him the trainer decided to give him a chance for his life. He "We worked him the winter he was two years old, and I drove him on the snow, beating the best horse in Toledo. He was started in two races as a 2year-old, and in the fall showed a very fast mile over the Erie, Mich., track. I again worked him the following winter on the snow, but he did not seem to improve very much, lacking a brush of speed, but when I entered and started him in two races in Tiffin, Ohio, I found in scoring for the first time that he seemed to learn the game quickly, and came to his speed rapidly. From that time on he learned to race and developed fast.

"As a 3-year-old Cresceus started in seven races, winning at Glens Falls, N. Y.; Reading, Mass.; New York City, where he won the stallion race from Charley Herr, Binger, Daredevil, etc. in 2:041/2, and Indianapolis. That year he lost to Eilorse, Tommy Britton, Captain Jack and The Abbott.

"As a 6-year-old he won every race in which he started, including the $20,-000 stallion stake, when he defeated Charley Herr, Gratton Boy, Arlan, Lord Vincent, Benton M. and Jupe. At Hartford, Conn., Sept. 5, he lowered the stallion record at 2:0514, then held by Directum, trotting in 2:0414. At Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 6, starting against his own stallion record, he trot-VANDERBILT WINS $53,139. Paris, Nov. 18. — W. K. Vanderb'lt comes ninth on the list of winners on the French turf in 1902. His winnings amount to $53,139.

TOPICS OF THE TURF. Never before were there so many horses being prepared for the racing carnival on Richmond avenue, Buffalo, as at present.

Mr. A. E. Peren, of Buffalo, has been winning his share of the races down on the New York speedway the past week. His mare Rosalet, 2:124, is one of the covered to the cov is one of the queens of Harlem way. Wm. McGrady, proprietor of horse-men's headquarters on Massachusetts avenue, has purchased of F. B. Dean the pacer Mary B., 2:244, for speedway driving. Mr. McGrady has a stable full of good ones for the winter carnival on the snow. He can team to a close finish in great shape, too.

The once celebrated Tallyrand, of the turf, Mr. Orrin Hickok, is reported in the last stages of paresis in a Cleveland hospital. The knight of the sulky who piloted St. Julien to a world's trotting record is known from ocean to ocean. He is a member of the old school of drivers, of whom few remain.

Mr. C. J. Hamlin, the "grand old man" of the trotting kingdom, was out to Village Farm the other day looking over the stock. Mr. Hamlin does not go to East Aurora as often as formerly, but about once a month visits the breeding place in which he has so long been interested. Until a month ago he went to the farm regularly every Wednesday. He will spend the winter in Florida Ella Eddy, 2:12, owned in Buffalo for many years, was sold at the Belle Meade Farm dispersal the other day to G. R. Cook, of Trenton, N. J. for $360. This daughter of Jerome Eddy, 2:16½, was bred by Henry C. Jewett, but developed and driven to her record by "Cooney" Zimmer, of Buffalo. The Zimmer Bros. own a stock farm near Rochester, and still own a few good racing prospects.

Ed Geers will sample several Village Farm youngsters this winter to see about their prospects. Among them are two yearlings by The Beau Ideal. One is Prince Favorite, dam Princess Chimes, and the other Prince Ideal, dam Future Princess. These two colts are bred in the purple, Princess Chimes being the dam of Lady of the Manor, 2:0414, and Future Princess the dam of The Earl, 2:17.

Dash races will never become general, says a well-known turf writer, Radical changes are easier plan-ned than executed. The 2 in 3 system is all right for the fast classes on mile tracks, but will hardly do for the half-mile rings. The old way is good enough. It might be a good plan to rule

IRWIN WILL SUCCEED DOOLEY. Montreal, Nov. 18. - Montreal will have baseball next year, and Charlie Dooley will have nothing to do with it. That is the result of the annual meeting of the Montreal baseball club on Saturday evening. When the members met the chief subject to discuss was the ownership of the franchise. Chas. F. Then he made an offer to the club of his interest in it. The other members of the company very much appreciated what Dooley had done in giving them the first chance, and they considered his offer fair enough.
