M'GRAW LIKES "BABE"

J. Would Have Pitched Him Against the Tigers.

Before the world's series of 1909 John J. McGraw, of the New York Giants, was asked what pitcher he thought would be the most effective against Detroit. "I don't know, as it would be in place for me to answer that," was the reply "but I'll say one thing—that if I had to be reponsible for the games I should see that Adams did not go to waste on the bench.

He looks to me like a pitcher."

Then came the story that McGraw had been hot on Adams' trail. Before ever the young man went to Pittsburg. McGraw had tried to obtain him from a minor league club, only to find that Pittsburg had him tied up, and that New York could not get him.

SOMEBODY LIED.

Said Tyrus Cobb: "I wish to state There's no ball player half so great 'Honus' Wagner; he's the king And daddy of them all-I sing His praises and take off my hat To 'Honus' and his mighty bat."

Said "Honus" Wagner: "Hear

vow! I want to tell you here and now-For twenty years I'm on the job, But never saw a man like Cobb; In deference I raise my lid To Tyrus Cobb, the candy kid."

You tickle me, I'll tickle you: What isn't false must needs be true, Far be it from me to impeach The word of "Ty," the "Georgia peach."
