MOTHER SO POORLY

Could Hardly Care for Children—Finds Health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Bovina Center, N.Y.—“For six years I have not had as good health as I have now. I was very young when my first baby was born and my health was very bad after that. I was not regular and I had pains in my back and was so poorly that I could hardly take care of my two children. I doctored with several doctors but got no better. They told me there was no help without an operation. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has helped me wonderfully. I do most of my own work now and take care of my children. I recommend your remedies to all suffering women.”

Mrs. WILLARD A. GRAHAM, Care of ELSWORTH TUTTLE, Bovina Center, N.Y.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy we know for women's ills. If you need such a medicine why don't you try it?

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Another Way

BY GORDON HOLMES.

Author of "A Mysterious Disappearance," "The House of Silence," Etc.

During many years of a busy life he had learned the immense importance of choosing the right words in circumstances like the present, and he did not hesitate now over a phrase that might well have carried a chill to the heart and brain of one who risked being charged with having committed a murder. But Mrs. Delamar did not wince. She rose gracefully, said she would give careful consideration to his advice, favored Clancy with an inscrutable smile, and took her departure. "Well, not much farther, are we?" growled Steingall, when a cab had rattled away with the visitor.

"Some folks think so," was the sarcastic reply.

"Don't you agree?"

"She has a strong card up her sleeve," fumed Clancy.

"Waverton as the king of trumps, I suppose."

"It looks like it."

"At any rate, I shall play the ace to-morrow. Is it worth while giving an eye to that scamp Teal?"

"Oh, no! he's a scamp, is he? Since when have you arrived at that opinion?"

"I forgot to tell you that I met a man the other day who knew him in a street, which he had to quit in a hurry. He had some pull with the politicians, and he was in connection with an Indian reservation out Arizona way; but he had to quit that, too, and now he plays poodle about the disposal of unattractive females in summer resorts in Florida. He has managed always to keep within the letter of the law, but he deceives people as soon as someone blows in who knows his record."

"You mean to play Waverton's game?" chirped Clancy with a bantering smile.

"To that extent, at any rate," and Steingall chewed a cigar ferociously.

"What about watching him?"

"Clancy knew that the "him" alluded to was Teal," he said. "This affair will be fought out by two women and one man, and the man's name is Scott, alias Waverton."

The "playing of Waverton's game" was accomplished in a manner that became perfectly clear when the reports of the quest were published. The coroner's court had not been opened five minutes before the local reporters realized that they were, as they put it colloquially, in for a big thing, and the headline "Sensational Developments," quickly made its appearance in the paragraphs published in the evening newspapers.

Dr. Gilman was the first witness called, and his words stirred the pulses of all who listened. "When I testified in this inquiry a fortnight ago," he said, "I stated that the general appearance of the body found in the cutter was compatible with death from natural causes. Although, even at that early date, I had reason to think differently, I deemed it advisable, subject to the approval of the coroner, not to mention my suspicion until I had verified them. In the meantime I have made a careful analysis of the contents of the stomach, as well as other organic matter of the body directly affected by irritant matter introduced by way of the alimentary canal, and I have no hesitation now in saying that Mr. Kyle was poisoned."

At that word "poisoned," a curious thrill ran through the small court, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mrs. Delamar and Waverton had not met until they saw each other across a wide table in the well of the court, and the woman had been manifestly surprised at sight of him, while she had reason to believe when Waverton acknowledged her presence with a reserved bow.

But her self-control was marvellous, and she appeared to devote her attention solely to the business in hand, and chatted with a local lawyer, Traherne by name, who she had instructed that morning to watch the proceedings on her behalf.

It was easy to see that the doctor's emphatic announcement of the cause of her husband's death gave her a decided and unpleasant shock. After one long stare of fright and incredulity, in which doctor and detectives shared equally, she turned to Traherne and evidently urged him to put some questions to the witness instantly. He, of course, whispered an assurance that he would be given every opportunity later to elicit any point he might deem pertinent to the inquiry. Meanwhile, Mrs. Delamar must needs for a while hinder him in taking notes, for he was a shrewd man, and he guessed at once that the Atlantic City mystery was about to shed some of its mysteriousness.

"Have you ascertained the agent, Dr. Gilman?" said the coroner calmly. He was devoid of "nerves," and the scratching of his pen provided the only sound in the room when the first slight hum of excitement had died away.

"Yes, the man had swallowed an excessive dose of crystals of nicotine—sufficient, in my estimation, to kill a hundred men."

The reporters duly recorded the sensation made by this testimony, and the comment did not exaggerate its effect on the few privileged onlookers who had obtained admission to the inquest.

The doctor forthwith entered into a technical description of the effects of crystals of nicotine; but when the coroner asked if he had formed any definite view as to whether the deceased man had taken the poison when in the cutter or had been placed after death in the seat where he was found, Mr. Traherne jumped up.

"I respectfully submit that the witness ought," he answered, "that question at this stage."

"For whom do you appear?" demanded the coroner.

"For the widow, Mrs. Kyle."

"Is it in her interests that you object to Dr. Gilman stating his opinion?"

"By no means. I am awayed rather by my own notion of the proper proceedings. Mrs. Kyle is, of course, entitled to know that every fact should be made known."

The coroner nodded to Dr. Gilman.

"You are of opinion, then, that Traherne, rather red-faced, since he was doubtful of the right line to follow, is, I think, the witness should be allowed to proceed," said the coroner quietly, and the lawyer sat down again.

"I think the witness should be allowed to proceed," said the coroner quietly, and the lawyer sat down again.

"I think the witness should be allowed to proceed," said the coroner quietly, and the lawyer sat down again.

To Be Continued.

London, Sept. 11.—J. Foster Stackhouse, who was intimately associated with the late Capt. Scott in organizing the fateful expedition to the South Pole, is arranging for another trip to the Antarctic. The plans are for an expedition to start from London in August, 1914, to explore King Edward VII. land. It is expected the explorers will be away for nearly two years, sailing in the steam yacht Polar, specially built for navigation in Polar regions.

PASSING OF THE PATROL AND OLD AMBULANCE

Interesting Associations That Hang About Vehicles Long Used.

The police ambulance that has been displaced by the new motor apparatus was a good old wagon, and it helped to save the lives of many people seriously injured, or ill, but like many old people who have labored long and faithfully in harness, it became too old—too out of date.

People who were crushed in factories or on railroads, struck by street cars or injured in the many ways in which man can be injured in a large industrial city, have been rushed with speed to the hospitals, to operating tables, or to homes, in the hope that the services of skilled surgeons might avail in saving the tiny flicker of life that was left. Men, women and children, too ill to move hand or foot, have been carried out to the stretchers, and conveyed gently to the hospitals over the rough roads of some parts of the city. The journey made a little smoother by the rubber tires and padded cushions, and the ambulance was well equipped. And now it will work no more in the city of London, because it has been deemed too old-fashioned to keep up with the rapidly increasing pace of city life.

Babies Born in It.

Babies have been born within its walls while mothers were being rushed to the hospitals, and many men, seriously injured, have passed away with perhaps only a conscious with them when they died. Many would have died had it not been for the fleet-footed horses and the excellent driving of Mr. E. Walsh, who has been in charge of that department of police work for ten years, and who is schooled in the art of giving first aid to the injured.

Passing of the Wagon.

Taken from the police barns recently by the tests of horses that have drawn it so many times, the ambulance was taken to a place of storage on King street, where it will be kept until the new motor ambulance is ready to be made for it to the police commissioners.

And the driver felt bad. Not that he did not welcome the automobile apparatus, but because he disliked the riding high in the air, and he was determined to understand every thought of his, and to know just when a case was serious, and when they had to go their hardest to help save a human life. The old patrol wagon, that has carried criminals of possibly every description, including fugitives from justice, wanted in other cities, murderers and men charged with fighting and being drunk, is also to be sold. The old horses that are so well known, and that are endeared to the hearts of many Londoners, are also to be disposed of. Perhaps someone who will look after them properly and give them a good home for the rest of their days will purchase them, for surely they deserve it. They are capable of a good deal of work and speed.

The automobile patrol and ambulance combined was put into service Monday and will be used for any case that may occur in future. No calls for the old patrol wagon will be accepted unless they are emergency ones, and the greater part of the work of the new patrol will be in bringing "arrests" to the police station.
